

Y! DRAFT REPORTS

Official Yahoo recaps for all 10 teams.

THIS PACKET

Each team section is the Yahoo draft recap: letter grade, headline, summary, best and worst pick with 2025/2026 projected points, ADP Analysis, bye-week points lost, schedule by opponent, then Yahoo's player outlook writeups. ADP Analysis uses Yahoo's chart (pick minus ADP): above zero fell, below zero early.

LEAGUE DRAFT GRADES

#	Team	Manager	Grade	Seat
1	Toilet Bowl King	DLin	B+	4
2	it's gibby time	Andy	B+	1
3	Definitely not a Boomer	Mr. G	C+	7
4	There is no 2nd best	Matt	C+	8
5	C Lambs Biggest Hater	Colin	D+	3
6	Squirtle Squad	Tristan	D	2
7	Average Sports Enthusiast	Kurt	D	10
8	#1 Y! Fan	Jerger	D-	9
9	11 Shots In	ASG	D-	6
10	He was #1	Pablo	F	5

PROJECTED STANDINGS

#	Team	Record	Seat
1	There is no 2nd best	11-3-0	8
2	Toilet Bowl King	10-4-0	4
3	it's gibby time	10-4-0	1
4	Definitely not a Boomer	10-4-0	7
5	C Lambs Biggest Hater	7-7-0	3
6	Squirtle Squad	7-7-0	2
7	Average Sports Enthusiast	4-10-0	10
8	#1 Y! Fan	4-10-0	9
9	11 Shots In	4-10-0	6
10	He was #1	3-11-0	5

POWER RANKINGS · PROJECTED POINTS

#	Team	Proj pts	Seat
1	Toilet Bowl King	1797.56	4
2	it's gibby time	1767.23	1
3	Definitely not a Boomer	1760.82	7
4	There is no 2nd best	1753.44	8
5	C Lambs Biggest Hater	1733.59	3
6	Average Sports Enthusiast	1718.37	10
7	#1 Y! Fan	1712.45	9
8	Squirtle Squad	1709.98	2
9	11 Shots In	1703.06	6
10	He was #1	1688.13	5

ANDY

B+

GRADE

it's gibby time Takes the Crown in Draft, but Will They Reign Supreme?

RECORD

10-4-0

POWER

#2

PROJ PTS

1767.23

SEAT

1

SUMMARY

it's gibby time strutted into the draft with the confidence of a catwalk model, snagging the first pick and a solid B+ grade. With a projected record of 10-4-0, they're eyeing a playoff spot in 9 Fantasy Experts & Mr Glenn, but with the 4th toughest schedule, they might want to keep their lucky socks handy. The draft was a rollercoaster, featuring a best pick that was a hair's breadth from ADP glory and a worst pick that might have everyone scratching their heads. Talk about a mixed bag of chips!

As the draft unfolded over 15 rounds, it's gibby time balanced risk and reward like a seasoned tightrope walker. With a projected finish of 2nd, they're in a prime position to make some noise this season. Just watch out for that lone player on bye week 6-hopefully, they don't forget to set their lineup! In the end, it's gibby time is ready to tackle the season, and we can't wait to see if they'll be dancing in the playoffs or just doing the walk of shame. Let's hope they don't trip over their own feet!

BEST DRAFT PICK

DJ Moore

WR - Round 6, Pick 60 - Bye 7

2025 PTS

145.18

2026 PTS

157.15

WORST DRAFT PICK

Michael Pittman Jr.

WR - Round 10, Pick 100 - Bye 9

2025 PTS

162.40

2026 PTS

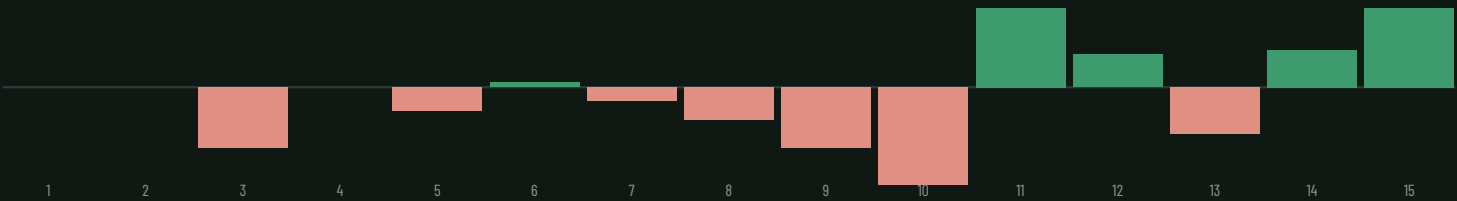

141.97

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK - ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.01	Jahmyr Gibbs	RB	1.3	+0	Det
2.10	Drake London	WR	20.2	+0	Atl
3.01	Javonte Williams	RB	33.5	-13	Dal
4.10	Jaylen Waddle	WR	39.8	+0	Den
5.01	D'Andre Swift	RB	45.6	-5	Chi
6.10	DJ Moore BEST	WR	58.9	+1	Buf
7.01	Jadarian Price	RB	63.7	-3	Sea
8.10	Rams	DST	87.2	-7	LAR
9.01	MarShawn Lloyd	RB	93.5	-13	GB
10.10	Michael Pittman Jr. WORST	WR	121.0	-21	Pit
11.01	Trevor Lawrence	QB	83.6	+17	Jax
12.10	Mark Andrews	TE	113.3	+7	Bal
13.01	Cam Little	K	130.5	-10	Jax
14.10	Romeo Doubs	WR	132.0	+8	NE
15.01	Aaron Jones Sr.	RB	124.3	+17	Min

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

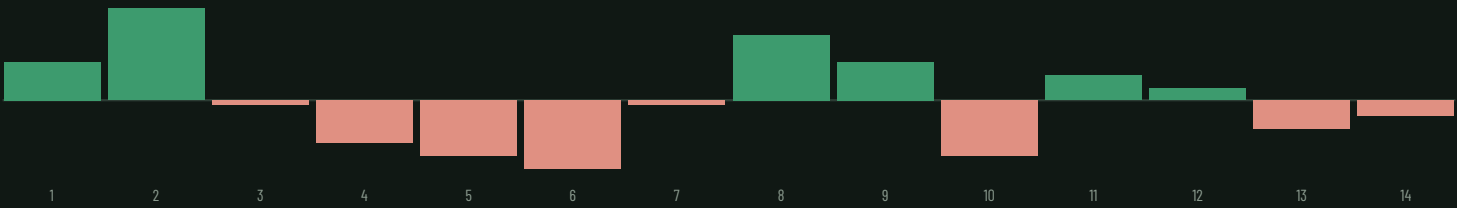

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (102 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
105	109	102	99	98	97	102	107	105	98	104	103	100	101

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Jahmyr Gibbs

RB - Round 1, Pick 1 - Bye 6

Gibbs is one of the league's most explosive playmakers, averaging 5.0 yards per carry with blistering touchdown production in all three of his NFL seasons. Even as Detroit's offense as a whole slipped last season and his own rushing efficiency dipped down the stretch, he still landed at 5.0 per carry with 18 touchdowns (five through the air) and 1,839 yards from scrimmage, proof that he carries this offense more than it carries him.

Gibbs' workload projection this season only makes him scarier. The Lions shipped David Montgomery to Houston, replacing him only with Isiah Pacheco, leaving a depth chart that hints at monster snap counts for the 5-foot-9, 199, star. The offensive line is in flux again, with longtime left tackle Taylor Decker gone, though the fix looks reasonable: standout Penei Sewell kicks over to the left side, opening right tackle for 17th overall pick Blake Miller after his four years starting there at Clemson. The line likely will improve, but it at least shouldn't regress further, and new offensive coordinator Drew Petzing figures to rely heavily on Gibbs.

Drake London

WR - Round 2, Pick 20 - Bye 11

Still suffering through unstable quarterback play, London prepares for his fifth NFL season with what may be his fifth different Week 1 starter. Tua Tagovailoa and Michael Penix are expected to compete for the job once Penix recovers from another serious knee injury. A completely overhauled coaching staff brings head coach Kevin Stefanski and offensive coordinator Tommy Rees to Atlanta to implement a new scheme. London thrived under the previous regime behind big-time volume, averaging 9.3 targets per game over the past two years (with 16 TDs in 29 games) Missing five games last season temporarily halted London's momentum, yet his underlying metrics remained phenomenal.

London finished his shortened campaign ranking sixth among wide receivers with a 28.4 percent target rate and 12th with 2.42 yards per route run. He translated that elite usage into a robust 16.8 PPR points per game despite the slow December. Better QB play might even unlock another level of production, but that's not a great bet to happen with Tagovailoa and/or Penix taking snaps.

Javonte Williams

RB - Round 3, Pick 21 - Bye 14

Last year's one-year prove-it deal in Dallas worked out great for Williams, who parlayed a breakout into a three-year, $24 million extension this offseason. He showed no lingering effects from his 2022 surgically repaired knee, ripping off 4.8 yards per carry on 252 attempts and punching in 11 touchdowns thanks to steady short-range work. There's a catch on the receiving side, though, and it's likely to persist.

Williams is so trusted in pass protection that it arguably suppresses his own upside, and the targets he does get tend to be hurried checkdowns under pressure rather than schemed touches, which helps explain an ugly 2.9 yards per target that may not climb much. That leaves his fantasy value almost entirely tied to the ground game. Fortunately, that's a strength, as Dallas fields one of the league's premier interior run-blocking units, an environment that inflated efficiency and should keep the carries and goal-line looks flowing.

Jaylen Waddle

WR - Round 4, Pick 40 - Bye 10

A blockbuster offseason trade provides Waddle with a fresh start inside a seemingly crowded receiver room in Denver. He joins forces with Sean Payton and Bo Nix to lead a depth chart that also features Courtland Sutton, Pat Bryant, Marvin Mims, and Troy Franklin at wide receiver. Waddle stands out as the most explosive of the bunch, carrying the expectations of a No. 1 receiver after the Broncos surrendered the 30th overall pick to acquire him.

Waddle once seemed destined for the conventional path to stardom after catching 104 passes as a rookie and posting 1,356 yards in his second year. He saw that trajectory altered when Tyreek Hill emerged as the runaway top option in Miami for two-plus years. Waddle showed several positive signs last season after Hill's major knee injury, ranking 13th among receivers with 2.34 yards per route run. He also topped 9.0 yards per target for a fourth consecutive season while pushing his target rate up to 25.2 percent. He failed to translate those metrics into a huge fantasy impact because he averaged a mere 24.3 routes per game in a sluggish Miami offense. The Broncos presumably will give Waddle far more snaps and routes, but he will have legitimate competition for Nix's attention.

D'Andre Swift

RB - Round 5, Pick 41 - Bye 10

The Bears' running back committee doesn't fit the usual template since neither Swift nor Kyle Monangai runs with real power. What separates Swift, and makes him the more compelling fantasy option, is his big-play juice and receiving value. He has his limits, granted, profiling as more athletic than truly elusive and rarely piling up broken tackles, but that burst still flashes whenever he finds space to operate. He also deserves credit for sharpening his interior running in Philadelphia and now Chicago after fielding toughness criticism early in his Detroit days.

Swift has already proven he can produce even if Caleb Williams' development stalls, and a Bears' offensive line that shapes up as solid, if not quite dominant, should help. Should coach Ben Johnson coax a leap out of Williams, it would unlock even more scoring chances for Swift. Monangai will be in the mix as a rushing specialist and lead-protecting closer, but Swift is the engine, comfortably in RB2 range with high-end flex value as a floor.

DJ Moore

WR - Round 6, Pick 60 - Bye 7

Moore finds himself in Buffalo after the Bears traded him away early this offseason. He is coming off a frustrating 2025 campaign where he fell behind Chicago's other weapons, resulting in career lows of 50 receptions and 682 yards. While Bears coach Ben Johnson commended him for accepting a reduced role, fans grew incredibly sour, notably after a lazy route contributed to an overtime interception during a playoff defeat. Now 29 and joining his third franchise for his ninth NFL season, questions are surfacing about whether the veteran's best days are in the rearview mirror despite the fact that his 4.42 combine speed appears largely intact.

Moore represents a massive commitment from the Bills, who surrendered the 60th overall pick to acquire him and a fifth-rounder while taking on his substantial contract. Buffalo restructured the deal, guaranteeing $15.5 million of his $23.5 million salary in 2028 along with full guarantees over the next two years. It is a significant gamble on an aging player looking to bounce back, though the financial terms align more closely with WR2 money than top-tier WR1 compensation. He now gets a fresh start with a clear path to targets, but he must prove he can still be a highly productive focal point.

Jadarian Price

RB - Round 7, Pick 61 - Bye 11

The Seahawks drafted Price with the 32nd pick in this year's draft, and he is expected to lead the backfield from the outset. With Zach Charbonnet still rehabbing an ACL injury, price has little competition as Super Bowl MVP Kenneth Walker left for Kansas City and the remaining running back cast can't touch Price's talent.

Price sn't a prototype, mind you, checking in at 5-foot-11, 203, with unremarkable speed via a 4.49 40 and modest college numbers. The production is easy to forgive, given that Jeremiah Love soaked up the touches ahead of him at Notre Dame, but the middling size-speed combination is the more legitimate concern. Working off the bench, though, Price was relentlessly explosive, averaging 6.0 yards per carry with 21 touchdowns on 280 rushes and adding three return scores on just 22 tries. If Price doesn't convincingly seize lead-back duties ahead of Emanuel Wilson and George Holani in training camp, it will be very bad news for the Seahawks' offense.

Rams

DEF - Round 8, Pick 80 - Bye 11

The Rams' already-rosy outlook improved this June when GM Les Snead executed a blockbuster trade, sending Jared Verse and draft picks to Cleveland in exchange for pass rusher Myles Garrett. A strong front seven may now be the league's best, and Snead also brought in former Chiefs cornerbacks Trent McDuffie and Jaylen Watson, addressing the biggest weakness on last year's solid defense. The Rams are widely regarded as Super Bowl favorites, blessed with elite talent and coaching on both sides of the ball. While personnel changes dominate headlines, the Rams will also benefit from stability in the coaching ranks after defensive coordinator Chris Shula failed to land a head-coach job. With elite talent now distributed across every level of their defense, the Rams appear poised to dominate, though fantasy managers should note that they have a challenging schedule over the first five weeks.

MarShawn Lloyd

RB - Round 9, Pick 81 - Bye 11

Lloyd, a 2024 third-round pick, has played just one regular-season game through two NFL campaigns. No matter, he's now set up as the starting RB in Green Bay, where Josh Jacobs' placement on the Commissioner's Exempt List leaves the team without a proven starter for the foreseeable future.

Lloyd has the necessary athletic traits to become that starter, but he struggled with ball security in college, fumbling 10 times on 325 career touches. The Packers hope they have that corrected and can now unleash Lloyd's 4.46 speed without fear of constant mistakes. His competition for touches looks weak, with the Packers otherwise relying on Chris Brooks and recent trade acquisition Kaleb Johnson in the backfield.

Michael Pittman Jr.

WR - Round 10, Pick 100 - Bye 9

Indianapolis shipped Pittman to the Steelers this past March in a transaction that functioned mostly as a salary dump, netting only a late-round draft pick swap in the process. With zero financial protections securely built into his contract beyond his fully guaranteed 2026 salary, the 28-year-old could easily serve as a one-year rental for Mike McCarthy's newly installed coaching staff. His 2025 campaign started beautifully, as he racked up six touchdowns over his first eight contests and looked poised for a massive 1,000-yard season. Unfortunately, his momentum completely evaporated following Daniel Jones' season-ending injury in Week 14, leading to a dreadful 21.3 yards per game average over the final month to close with an 80-784-7 line.

Pittman steps into a Pittsburgh offense where he should immediately find a steady, high-floor role battling DK Metcalf and rookie Germie Bernard for targets. Assuming Aaron Rodgers takes the reins as tentatively expected, the scheme will likely heavily emphasize quick-hitting, short-area throws perfectly tailored to his physical possession style. While the consistent volume makes him a dependable weekly starter, fantasy managers should fiercely temper their expectations regarding explosive downfield plays or massive weekly yardage totals, as his game remains firmly rooted in moving the chains rather than taking the top off a defense.

Trevor Lawrence

QB - Round 11, Pick 101 - Bye 7

Lawrence turned in his most productive season yet in 2025, finishing as the QB4 in fantasy by capitalizing on good health and a career-high 29 passing touchdowns. Most of his passing metrics were similar to his previous peak, but the addition of nine rushing scores-five more than his previous career high-was the key differentiator for his fantasy value. Those scores weren't entirely fluky, as Lawrence repeatedly got chances to use his legs on designed red-zone runs. He also threw downfield more often than expected in Liam Coen's system, ranking fourth in the league for attempts of 10-plus yards downfield. His yardage totals could have been even higher had he not been plagued by a league-high number of drops from his receivers.

Lawrence and the Jaguars are betting on internal growth from Brian Thomas and Parker Washington rather than external additions, also bringing back WR Jakobi Meyers, WR/CB Travis Hunter and TE Brenton Strange. Lawrence is a strong bet for low-end QB1 production, with upside for far more if Coen can maintain some of the trends behind Jacksonville's red-hot November and December last year.

Mark Andrews

TE - Round 12, Pick 120 - Bye 13

Andrews posted a career-worst 24.8 receiving yards per game in 2025, with a decline down the stretch after he signed an extension in-season. He recorded a paltry 422 yards and 8.8 yards per reception despite drawing his highest target total since 2022. All the same, Baltimore allowed TE Isaiah Likely to depart in free agency this offseason, potentially setting up Andrews for a role that's similar to or larger than the one he handled last season.

Andrews will have to adjust to new offensive coordinator Declan Doyle, who figures to build his scheme around QB Lamar Jackson, RB Derrick Henry and WR Zay Flowers. With the Ravens otherwise leaning on unproven young players at wide receiver and tight end, Andrews is the early favorite to finish second on the team in targets, behind only Flowers. He also remains a trusted red-zone option, having found the end zone 17 times over the past two years without missing a single game. Andrews is in a good spot to produce, so long as he has some gas left in the tank at age 31.

Cam Little

K - Round 13, Pick 121 - Bye 7

Little experienced a dramatic second season that concluded with huge fantasy production down the stretch. Before that, he struggled, missing five field goals between Weeks 3 and 7. Little rebounded completely following a Week 8 bye, converting all 56 of his subsequent attempts (mostly PATs, to be fair) through the end of the regular season.

Little showcased incredible leg strength in the process, highlighted by a record-breaking 68-yard field goal. The young kicker averaged 11.5 fantasy points per game during the final two months of the season while attached to a surging Jacksonville offense. Little then suffered a costly miss in the opening round of the playoffs, but his overall standing with the franchise remains perfectly secure. He should continue to see plenty of long-distance opportunities this year, with a chance to maintain strong fantasy value even if the Jaguars as a whole can't match what they did last November and December.

Romeo Doubs

WR - Round 14, Pick 140 - Bye 11

The swirling hype surrounding a fresh start in New England flatlined in early June when the Patriots officially executed a blockbuster trade for superstar A.J. Brown. While a brand-new four-year, $68 million contract firmly guarantees Doubs a starting spot, there's now more risk that his volume disappoints. During his four-year tenure in Green Bay, he consistently settled into a highly modest range of 32.8 to 46.2 receiving yards per game, topping out at 724 yards and eight touchdowns while primarily functioning as a deep-league bye-week filler. Astonishingly, he has failed to eclipse the 100-yard receiving mark in any of his 59 career regular-season appearances.

Doubs has, however, showcased a highly intriguing knack for performing under the brightest lights, boasting magnificent playoff performances of 6-151-1 and 8-124-1 on his resume. The Patriots clearly heavily factored that January magic into their financial commitment, hoping he can translate those postseason flashes into consistent regular-season production. From a pure fantasy perspective, his thoroughly average athletic profile makes him an ideal real-life complementary piece alongside an alpha weapon like Brown, which unfortunately relegates him back to the unreliable, low-volume WR4 tier for standard drafts.

Aaron Jones Sr.

RB - Round 15, Pick 141 - Bye 6

Jones once ranked among the most explosive running backs in football, and while he still has some useful snaps left, 2025 confirmed his prime is in the rearview. He's 31 now, turning 32 in December, squarely at the age where nearly all backs, even the greats, tend to decline in a hurry. He was never a size-speed marvel at 5-foot-9, 206, instead marrying burst with elite vision to fuel his production and routinely place among the league leaders in yards per carry. The concern is that the burst is fading, and a lack of top-end speed (a 4.56 40 back in 2017) that once didn't matter is starting to show as his other margins erode.

Jones' saving grace is opportunity, as Minnesota didn't import any notable backfield talent this offseason, and returning teammate Jordan Mason has essentially no receiving resume. That should keep Jones as the preferred passing-down option between the two, particularly in spots calling for a receiver rather than a blocker. Just temper expectations because the trend points to a shrinking floor and ceiling alike.

TRISTAN

D

GRADE

Squirtle Squad Drafts Like They Were Playing with One Hand Tied Behind Their Back!

RECORD

7-7-0

POWER

#8

PROJ PTS

1709.98

SEAT

2

SUMMARY

Well, well, well, if it isn't Squirtle Squad, who managed to snag the second pick in the draft and still came away with a D grade. It seems like they were aiming for the playoffs but ended up drafting like they were trying to win a participation trophy instead. With a projected record of 7-7-0, they're looking at a middle-of-the-pack finish at 5th place, which is just a hop, skip, and a jump away from the coveted playoff spots. Maybe next time they'll remember that drafting is not just about picking names they like!

With the 9th toughest schedule in the league, Squirtle Squad might need a miracle or two to avoid being the league's punching bag. They did manage to pull off a decent pick with Sam LaPorta, who was snagged a bit later than expected, but their worst pick at 59 just might haunt them like a bad horror movie. And let's not forget the three players on bye week 11-because who doesn't love a little extra challenge? At this rate, Squirtle Squad might just be playing for pride, but hey, at least they'll have some great stories to tell at the end of the season!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Sam LaPorta

TE - Round 8, Pick 79 - Bye 6

2025 PTS

86.90

2026 PTS

142.00

WORST DRAFT PICK

Rome Odunze

WR - Round 6, Pick 59 - Bye 10

2025 PTS

124.10

2026 PTS

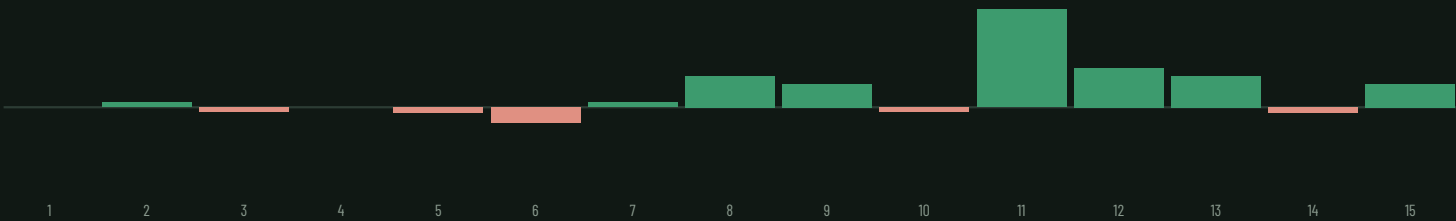

156.66

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK – ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

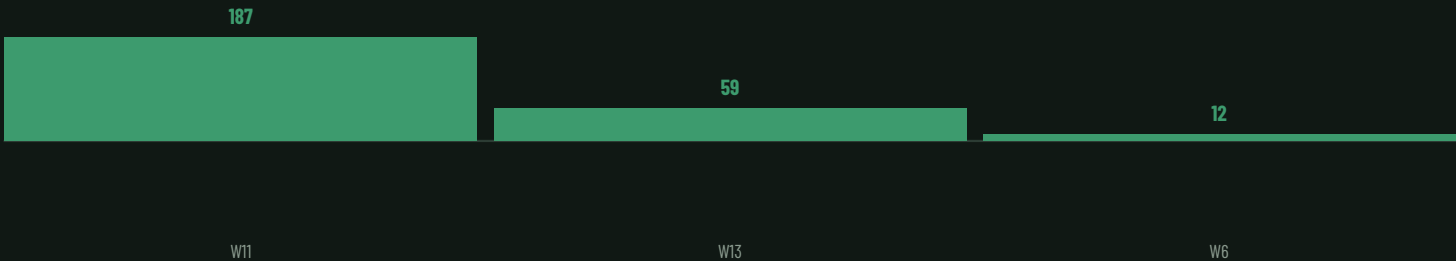

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.02	Bijan Robinson	RB	2.0	+0	Atl
2.09	Ashton Jeanty	RB	17.9	+1	LV
3.02	A.J. Brown	WR	24.0	-2	NE
4.09	Lamar Jackson	QB	38.7	+0	Bal
5.02	Ladd McConkey	WR	44.6	-3	LAC
6.09	Rome Odunze WORST	WR	66.5	-8	Chi
7.02	Bhayshul Tuten	RB	61.2	+1	Jax
8.09	Sam LaPorta BEST	TE	63.2	+16	Det
9.02	Mike Evans	WR	69.7	+12	SF
10.09	Blake Corum	RB	99.5	-1	LAR
11.02	Josh Jacobs	RB	51.8	+50	GB
12.09	Bo Nix	QB	98.7	+20	Den
13.02	Courtland Sutton	WR	106.2	+16	Den
14.09	Evan McPherson	K	142.1	-3	Cin
15.02	Patriots	DST	129.7	+12	NE

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

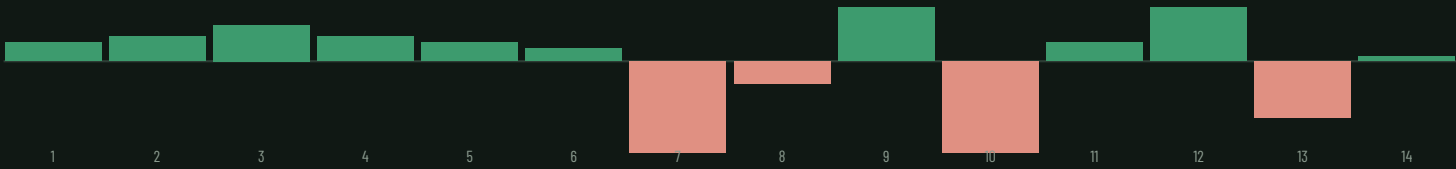

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (100 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
103	104	106	104	103	102	84	96	109	84	103	109	90	100

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Bijan Robinson

RB - Round 1, Pick 2 - Bye 11

The debate over the top pick in fantasy drafts starts and, for many, ends with Robinson. Talents like Jahmyr Gibbs and others have their own claims, but no running back at least matches Robinson's marriage of a massive workload, elite efficiency and rare durability, which together give him the fantasy's best floor-ceiling combination. Tyler Allgeier departed for Arizona, and a strong offensive line remains intact in Atlanta, cementing Robinson's usage at a league-leading level. New Falcons coach Kevin Stefanski will probably lean on backup Brian Robinson at times, but that likely represents a downgrade from Allgeier, who vultured 143 carries and eight rushing touchdowns last year, including 19 totes inside the 10.

Robinson pairs that volume with explosive results, with career marks of 4.9 yards per carry and 6.7 yards per touch, and his pass-catching keeps the target floor high in a way few backs offer. Between his power, 4.46 speed and refined hands, Robinson projects for elite per-touch production plus better volume and durability than any running back.

Ashton Jeanty

RB - Round 2, Pick 19 - Bye 13

The sixth pick in the 2025 draft, Jeanty entered the NFL in one of the toughest situations for any rookie. The Raiders' offensive line couldn't block and the scheme was so bad that the team fired offensive coordinator Chip Kelly midseason. It didn't get better after Kelly was canned either. By season's end, Pete Carroll was one-and-done as head coach. All of which is to say, don't judge Jeanty on last year's average of 3.7 yards per carry.

Jeanty should have a different experience this year under new coach Klint Kubiak, who plans to utilize a zone-blocking scheme that Super Bowl MVP Kenneth Walker thrived in last season in Seattle. Jeanty should also benefit from a rebuilt offensive line, headlined by standout center Tyler Linderbaum and left guard Spencer Burford, plus the return of left tackle Kolton Miller after a Week 4 injury ended his 2025 season. Improved quarterback play should also help, but Jeanty does come with major risk after suffering a reported ankle sprain three weeks before the start of the season. He's uncertain for Week 1, potentially leaving Mike Washington as the Raiders' starting RB at the beginning of the regular season.

A.J. Brown

WR - Round 3, Pick 22 - Bye 11

Emerging victorious from a highly competitive trade market, New England acquired Brown by sending away a pair of future draft picks. The blockbuster move installs the veteran pass catcher as the undisputed primary weapon for young quarterback Drake Maye. Moving to the Patriots projects to provide a far more robust passing environment than what the Eagles delivered over recent seasons. He eclipsed 83 receiving yards per game during his first three campaigns in Philadelphia before slipping to a 66.9-yard average last year. That statistical dip raises minor concerns regarding a potential career decline as he enters his age-29 season.

Brown, however, offers immense fantasy upside if things click in New England. He has a long track record as one of the league's most efficient receivers on a per-target basis, and he's now joining forces with a QB who led the league in multiple pass efficiency stats last year. Brown won't come cheap on draft day and is perhaps a riskier pick than other WRs in his ADP range, but the ceiling might be worth chasing when two elite talents like Brown and Maye are paired together.

Lamar Jackson

QB - Round 4, Pick 39 - Bye 13

A combination of lingering lower-body injuries and general offensive stagnation in Baltimore led to a frustrating 2025 season for Jackson. He missed four games with various ailments-including hamstring, toe, and back issues-and played hurt through several others, resulting in a career-low 23.2 pass attempts per game. While his efficiency as a downfield passer remained strong-specifically his 6:0 TD:INT ratio on deep balls-he lacked the opportunities to sustain high fantasy totals. The most noticeable drop-off was in his rushing, where his attempts and yards per game fell to career lows as injuries deflated his wheels.

Jackson returned healthy this spring, and the Ravens have cleared out their coaching staff, hiring Declan Doyle as offensive coordinator to inject more pre-snap motion and play-action into the game plan. With rookie wideouts Ja'Kobi Lane and Elijah Sarratt providing needed size, and RB Derrick Henry returning for another campaign, the offense seemingly has the necessary pieces to rebound, though depth is an issue after some tough offseason losses. Assuming the new scheme takes hold and Jackson enters the year at full health, he is arguably the best fantasy bounce-back candidate among QBs, capable of challenging Josh Allen for overall-QB1 status at the end of the year.

Ladd McConkey

WR - Round 5, Pick 42 - Bye 7

The Los Angeles offense completely cratered last year, so McConkey wasn't necessarily to blame for his sophomore slump. Offensive-line injuries derailed the team's passing attack and forced the unit into a more cautious approach. McConkey essentially disappeared over his final seven games, recording no more than six targets, four catches, or 43 yards in any single contest. He performed much better prior to the collapse, averaging 13.9 PPR points and 8.0 targets over his first 10 games. He combined strong volume with a passable 7.9 yards per target and a 63.8 percent catch rate during that opening stretch. He achieved this early success despite ceding a significant amount of slot work to Keenan Allen.

McConkey desperately needs better injury luck in 2026, though the Chargers are taking additional steps to stabilize the roster. He will play under new offensive coordinator Mike McDaniel, who was hired to replace Greg Roman. He watched McDaniel bring fullback Alec Ingold with him from Miami, while the front office also signed Keaton Mitchell and Charlie Kolar. The moves point to an emphasis on running the ball, but that could also mean a play-action-heavy offense in which McConkey posts excellent per-route numbers.

Rome Odunze

WR - Round 6, Pick 59 - Bye 10

Odunze has failed to meet the lofty expectations placed on him as a top-ten draft selection. Nevertheless, he has displayed enough promise to warrant inclusion on various breakout candidate lists again. Following a rookie year where he managed only 54 receptions for 734 yards on 101 targets, he started the 2025 season with a massive surge of production. Over the first four weeks, he hauled in five scores and averaged 74 yards per contest.

Odunze unfortunately saw his momentum stall, as he hit double-digit PPR points on only two more occasions during the remainder of the year. A nagging heel injury proved to be a significant obstacle, keeping him on the official injury report from early November through the end of his campaign. Though he was able to suit up for postseason action, he failed to make much of an impact. With the departure of DJ Moore and Olamide Zaccheaus in Chicago, the team is counting on him, Luther Burden, and Colston Loveland to command the bulk of the target share.

Bhayshul Tuten

RB - Round 7, Pick 62 - Bye 7

Given his blazing 4.32 speed and compact 5-foot-9, 206, build, Tuten profiled as a big-play specialist coming out of Virginia Tech as a fourth-round pick last year. Jacksonville flipped that script, deploying him as an unlikely short-yardage weapon, and he answered with seven touchdowns on just 93 touches. Travis Etienne handled the featured role in nearly every other situation, but his workload and power limitations demanded a complementary presence, and Tuten filled it surprisingly well. That success underscored the considerable raw power packed into his short, explosive frame, and his relentless motor suggests his goal-line effectiveness was genuine rather than a mere product of the role.

Tuten has the opportunity to absorb the work left behind as Etienne is now in New Orleans. Free-agent addition Chris Rodriguez, a bruiser, may inherit much of the short-yardage duty, potentially freeing Tuten to operate more like Etienne did. Nothing's guaranteed, though, as Tuten likely lacks Etienne's vision, pacing and ball security. Fumbles and drops plagued him in college, and a rookie year with two fumbles and only 14 targets hasn't fully quieted those doubts. Cleaning up the mistakes would unlock enormous upside.

Sam LaPorta

TE - Round 8, Pick 79 - Bye 6

LaPorta set career highs with 12.2 yards per reception and 54.3 yards per game last season, but a herniated disc ended up overshadowing his strong start to the year. While it may have been a disappointment to fantasy managers, LaPorta at least proved that the departure of offensive coordinator Ben Johnson was not a major hindrance to his output. In fact, LaPorta saw his catch rate jump nearly 10 points to an impressive 81.6 percent before the back injury shut him down after nine games.

LaPorta wasn't a full participant in Detroit's offseason program, but he's expected back for training camp, filling his usual role as the third or fourth option in an offense that also features RB Jahmyr Gibbs and WRs Amon-Ra St. Brown and Jameson Williams. While LaPorta may be limited to around 5-6 targets per game if everyone stays healthy, his rookie-year production (before Williams' breakout) shows that the tight end is capable of taking on far more volume when needed. Even if that chance doesn't come about, LaPorta's healthy floor has always safely been in TE1 range for fantasy when he's been available.

Mike Evans

WR - Round 9, Pick 82 - Bye 8

A collarbone fracture ultimately derailed the legendary 1,000-yard streak for Evans last season, and he opted for a change of scenery this offseason by accepting a one-year agreement to join San Francisco. At age 33, he'll be playing outside of Tampa Bay for the first time in his NFL career, stepping into a highly favorable offensive environment in San Francisco. If he isn't washed up, Evans could get back to 1,000-plus yards and double-digit touchdowns.

Evans also carries undeniable downside as an aging pass catcher attempting to rebound from an injury-marred campaign. He nevertheless projects to handle a heavy workload right out of the gate in the upcoming season, with TE George Kittle coming back from an Achilles tear and WR Ricky Pearsall ruled out for the entire season with a knee injury. While Evans may not be a true target dominator, he has a chance to earn a huge share of the deep targets and end-zone looks in a perennially productive offense.

Blake Corum

RB - Round 10, Pick 99 - Bye 11

Corum's forgettable 2024 rookie campaign is a distant memory as he came into his own last season as an off-the-bench rushing specialist for the Rams. He gave Los Angeles a more explosive pure runner than starter Kyren Williams, even if Williams retains the edge in passing situations. That distinction doesn't cap Corum's ceiling, though. He handled full three-down duties at Michigan and could earn the same look with the Rams should Williams miss time. For now, with both healthy, Williams holds the complete trust of coach Sean McVay, whose system leans heavily on backs in pass protection.

Corum could post big numbers, though, both per-snap and cumulative, if handed a sustained run atop the depth chart. He's neither big nor fast by league standards, but he checks in roughly 10 pounds heavier than Williams while also being a touch quicker, making him the more powerful and explosive of the pair. In the meantime, he offers genuine standalone value as a spot starter once byes and injuries inevitably enter the picture.

Josh Jacobs

RB - Round 11, Pick 102 - Bye 11

Green Bay's quiet offseason suggested Jacobs was locked into a heavy workload, but he'll instead open the year on the Commissioner's Exempt List following misdemeanor domestic violence charges. With his timeline completely up in the air, Jacobs' ADP tanked just before Week 1. The Packers pivoted by trading for Kaleb Johnson to back up their new projected starter, MarShawn Lloyd.

Jacobs still has an ongoing legal case that could impact the NFL's decision about the length of his stay on the exempt list. He's likely to miss at least the first month of the season, with no assurance of returning later this year.

Bo Nix

QB - Round 12, Pick 119 - Bye 10

Nix finished QB7 in fantasy last season, mostly driven by extreme volume as he led the league with 669 dropbacks and 612 pass attempts. Nearly 71 percent of his passes traveled less than 10 yards downfield, which helped keep his completion rate respectable, though he finished 28th in YPA (6.4) and rarely pushed the ball vertically. His rushing totals were aided by 36 scrambles, but relying on pure volume is rarely a sustainable path to top-tier fantasy success.

With Sean Payton calling the shots, the Broncos have mostly stuck to the high-percentage, short-passing philosophy that served Drew Brees so well in his later years. The addition of Jaylen Waddle via trade could help add more of a vertical element, with speed to complement Courtland Sutton's size. Nix is expected to be healthy for Week 1 after an ankle injury in the playoffs, but he remains a volatile asset, relying on volume rather than top-notch passing efficiency or rushing skills.

Courtland Sutton

WR - Round 13, Pick 122 - Bye 10

Fresh off a spectacular finish to 2024, Sutton turned in a slightly underwhelming 2025 campaign, logging 74 receptions for 1,017 yards and seven scores on 124 targets. While those numbers kept him firmly in the weekly starting conversation across most fantasy formats, he lacked the explosive upside of a true difference-maker, slipping to WR20 with a 12.8 PPR average. Approaching his age-30/31 season, the offensive environment around him is suddenly far more crowded. The Broncos aggressively traded for Miami superstar Jaylen Waddle this past March, adding an elite playmaker to a depth chart already teeming with young talent like Troy Franklin, Pat Bryant, and Marvin Mims pushing for playing time.

Sutton should keep his role as Denver's premier red-zone weapon, meaning he'll heavily benefit if head coach Sean Payton's offensive overhaul finally clicks into gear. However, the sheer volume of targets he commands between the 20-yard lines is highly likely to evaporate with Waddle entering the fray. Compounding the situation is the natural risk of age-related decline for a physical, contested-catch specialist entering his ninth professional season. He projects as a reliable but touchdown-dependent flex option whose ceiling has been thoroughly capped by his team's blockbuster offseason acquisition.

Evan McPherson

K - Round 14, Pick 139 - Bye 6

McPherson remains attached to a potent Cincinnati offense, but it simply hasn't translated into elite fantasy production. He finished outside the top 15 players at his position in fantasy points per game for a third consecutive season in 2025. McPherson has dealt with mediocre overall field-goal volume, partly because his coaching staff frequently elects to go for it on fourth downs.

McPherson does at least provide steady extra-point production whenever Joe Burrow is healthy. McPherson also possesses plenty of leg strength, with a career-long kick of 63 yards, but he's never been among the elite when it comes to long-distance accuracy. There's still hope for consistent fantasy value, perhaps, though it would require a perfect-storm scenario where Burrow stays healthy all season and piles up yardage but struggles in/near the red zone.

Patriots

DEF - Round 15, Pick 142 - Bye 11

Zak Kuhr enters his first full season as defensive coordinator after getting strong results last year on an interim basis. New England's 3-4 front has been reinforced by the signing of pass rusher Dre'Mont Jones, while the secondary may get a boost from veteran safety Kevin Byard, who steps in to replace Jaylinn Hawkins. The infusion of young talent like second-round edge rusher Gabe Jacas provides some additional upside, but the Patriots still don't have any proven stars besides oft-injured cornerback Christian Gonzalez. Mike Vrabel's leadership helps, as does the solid scheme, but New England's strong results last season were at least partially due to a favorable schedule, which could hint at regression ahead. This year's schedule at least doesn't look terrible, apart from the Week 1 trip to Seattle.

COLIN

D+

GRADE

C Lambs Biggest Hater Drafts Like a Pro... If Pro Means'Not Quite There Yet'!

RECORD

7-7-0

POWER

#5

PROJ PTS

1733.59

SEAT

3

SUMMARY

In a draft that can only be described as a rollercoaster ride, C Lambs Biggest Hater managed to snag the 3rd pick and still ended up with a D+ grade. With a projected record of 7-7-0, it seems they might be fighting for that last playoff spot in 9 Fantasy Experts & Mr Glenn. They'll need to channel their inner underdog, especially with the 7th toughest schedule looming over them like a dark cloud on a sunny day. Two players on bye week 6? That's just the cherry on top of this draft sundae!

Despite the challenges, C Lambs Biggest Hater did manage to pull off a solid pick with Joe Burrow, who was drafted at 63, beating the ADP of 50. However, they also took a swing and a miss with Jonathon Brooks, who was drafted at 83, falling short of the ADP of 91. With a projected finish of 5th, it looks like C Lambs Biggest Hater might be in for a season of ups and downs. But hey, at least they can always say they were the best at being average-good luck, C Lambs Biggest Hater!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Joe Burrow

QB - Round 7, Pick 63 - Bye 6

2025 PTS

139.46

2026 PTS

296.11

WORST DRAFT PICK

Jonathon Brooks

RB - Round 9, Pick 83 - Bye 5

2025 PTS

0.00

2026 PTS

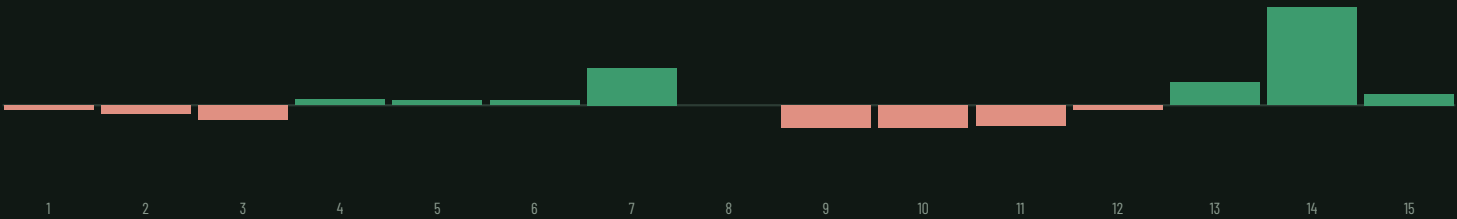

153.45

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK - ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.03	Ja'Marr Chase	WR	3.5	-1	Cin
2.08	Brock Bowers	TE	21.0	-3	LV
3.03	Kyren Williams	RB	27.9	-5	LAR
4.08	Rashee Rice	WR	35.8	+2	KC
5.03	Travis Etienne Jr.	RB	41.9	+1	NO
6.08	Davante Adams	WR	56.9	+1	LAR
7.03	Joe Burrow BEST	QB	50.3	+13	Cin
8.08	Marvin Harrison Jr.	WR	78.2	+0	Ari
9.03	Jonathon Brooks WORST	RB	91.1	-8	Car
10.08	Jacory Croskey-Merritt	RB	106.4	-8	Was
11.03	Kyle Monangai	RB	110.0	-7	Chi
12.08	Ka'imi Fairbairn	K	118.8	-1	Hou
13.03	Jordan Addison	WR	115.4	+8	Min
14.08	Patrick Mahomes	QB	103.8	+34	KC
15.03	Chargers	DST	139.4	+4	LAC

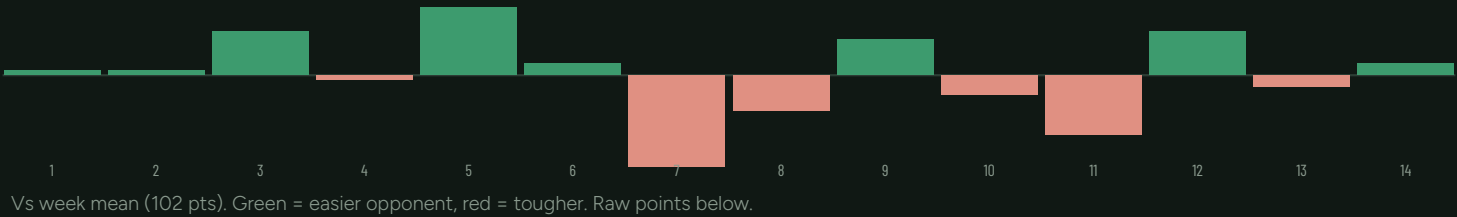

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Ja'Marr Chase

WR - Round 1, Pick 3 - Bye 6

Positioned for another every-down role within a pass-heavy Cincinnati offense, Chase boasts an incredibly secure floor and ceiling. He topped the NFL with 185 targets in 2025 and joined an exclusive group as just the third receiver in history to record consecutive seasons with at least 125 catches. Despite this unprecedented volume, a drop from 9.8 to 7.6 yards per target caused a dip in his fantasy average to 19.5 PPR points. A nagging injury to Joe Burrow contributed to the efficiency decline, resulting in 7.9 yards per target on throws from the star quarterback.

Chase relied on backup Joe Flacco for five games and actually improved on his elite production; he commanded 14.4 targets per contest during that stretch to deliver 21.5 PPR points. A fully healthy Joe Burrow reclaims the starting role this season, with a re-signed Flacco offering reliable insurance. Chase displays remarkable consistency, suiting up for 16 or more contests in four of his five seasons while eclipsing 16 PPR points per game each year.

Brock Bowers

TE - Round 2, Pick 18 - Bye 13

Bowers proved his immense talent throughout his sophomore campaign, even while battling a knee issue from Week 1 onward. He suited up for just 12 contests in 2025 but still managed to compile 64 receptions for 680 yards and seven touchdowns on 86 targets. Bowers saw his per-game averages take a slight dip compared to a historic 2024 debut where he secured 112 passes for 1,194 yards, but he was still ahead of every tight end besides Trey McBride.

Bowers has demonstrated remarkable consistency despite catching passes from a revolving door of quarterbacks that includes Gardner Minshew, Aidan O'Connell, Desmond Ridder and Geno Smith. The Raiders anticipate 2026 will be a different story, having made significant investments in both their QB room and offensive line. If nothing else, new head coach Klint Kubiak figures to upgrade the scheme, building a gameplan centered around Bowers and RB Ashton Jeanty. It's not an ideal situation, but it's much better than what Bowers dealt with last year (while also dealing with a significant knee injury).

Kyren Williams

RB - Round 3, Pick 23 - Bye 11

Another year, another highly productive campaign for Williams, whose 2025 season marked his third straight with more than 1,300 yards and 13 touchdowns from scrimmage. He even set career highs in scrimmage yards (1,533), receiving yards (290) and receptions (36), buoyed by his availability for all 17 regular-season games. Yet for all that success, his draft-day price figures to hit its lowest ebb in years, and the culprit is the late-season emergence of Blake Corum. From Week 7 through the NFC championship, Corum averaged 10.1 carries and 0.9 targets while Williams had 14.9 carries and 2.6 targets.

Williams is still the starter, of course, but Corum averaged 5.1 yards per carry on 145 regular-season rushes, so it's fair to assume he resumes his post as one of the league's most heavily involved backups, at least on the ground. The encouraging news is that Williams already proved he can deliver as a high-end RB2 even with Corum eating into the touches. Climbing back into true RB1 territory, however, might be a little tougher.

Rashee Rice

WR - Round 4, Pick 38 - Bye 5

Rice has delivered elite fantasy production whenever he manages to stay on the field, though a 2024 LCL tear along with a suspension and a concussion in 2025 limited him to a mere 12 appearances over the last two campaigns. Across those dozen contests he averaged a robust 17.9 PPR points and 8.9 targets, extending a breakout trend that began late in his 2023 rookie year when he posted 16.3 points and 8.5 targets over his final 11 outings including the playoffs. The volume is undeniably bankable in an Andy Reid scheme that features a long history of elevated passing rates and modest target competition. His role as a short-yardage vacuum is highly secure as long as he avoids further trouble, but keeping his name clear of off-field drama remains a massive hurdle.

Rice watched his ADP surge this April after the league officially concluded its investigation into domestic violence accusations, only for his draft cost to plummet weeks later when a probation violation resulted in a 30-day jail sentence. He was already rehabilitating from arthroscopic knee surgery at the time, and while Kansas City anticipates the knee will be fine for Week 1, the parole violation carries the very real risk of another NFL-mandated suspension. Further complicating matters is Patrick Mahomes' ongoing recovery from an ACL tear following the team's first missed postseason. Given his glaring lack of downfield production -- totaling just four career receptions beyond 20 yards downfield -- any major shift in the offensive ecosystem could make his usage vulnerable. The Chiefs do seem optimistic about Rice's availability early in the season.

Travis Etienne Jr.

RB - Round 5, Pick 43 - Bye 8

Etienne signed with the Saints this offseason after five largely productive years in Jacksonville. He was the engine of the Jaguars' offense in 2025, turning 260 carries into 1,107 yards and seven touchdowns while proving reliable through the air, catching 36 of 52 targets for 292 yards and six more scores. At 5-foot-11, 215, Etienne carries just enough mass to profile as a workhorse, but he wins with vision and agility rather than power, and his durability track record isn't spotless.

Etienne's path to genuine RB1 status likely runs through big plays and receptions rather than grinding out yards between the tackles, since bruising interior volume isn't his game. The situation helps, as Alvin Kamara reportedly wants another season in New Orleans but would return as a backup or passing-down specialist, not a true 1B. Should Etienne keep ripping off 40-yard runs, finding the end zone and staying busy as a receiver, he can climb into the top 12 without huge volume.

Davante Adams

WR - Round 6, Pick 58 - Bye 11

Adams is past his physical prime, yet underlying metrics prove he has still some utility beyond the red zone. He'd probably get more snaps and targets in the middle of the field with another team, but the Rams provide an enormous quantity of end-zone targets that allows Adams a lower standard for accumulating yardage. It was a good formula last year, thanks mostly to 14 touchdowns, though the frequent jump balls did push his overall catch rate down some.

Adams ultimately managed to avoid an offseason relocation despite some trade rumors, as the Rams instead ended up focusing on their defense. There's not much at wide receiver behind Adams and Puka Nacua, potentially allowing both to continue thriving in fantasy even if the Rams are using a lot of multi-TE looks. The biggest concern with Adams is that he's 33 years old and already past his prime, with additional risk of falling off the proverbial cliff each year.

Joe Burrow

QB - Round 7, Pick 63 - Bye 6

Burrow suffered major injuries in two of the past three seasons, most recently missing Weeks 3-12 of 2025 due to turf toe. He returned to fire 15 touchdown passes in his final six appearances, averaging 37 attempts per game - a 630-attempt pace over a full schedule. He will need to maintain most of that volume to push for a top-five finish in fantasy, given his lack of rushing production and tendency to favor short or intermediate passes. Last year, Burrow finally broke a three-year streak of avoiding the vertical game, with 10.4 percent of his attempts traveling 20-plus yards downfield, though his average target depth was a relatively pedestrian 7.6 yards.

Burrow still has Ja'Marr Chase and Tee Higgins leading the receiving corps and RB Chase Brown serving as a top check-down target. The impressive playmakers help Burrow to pile up passing volume without sacrificing much efficiency. He probably won't run enough to finish among the top 3-4 fantasy quarterbacks, but he offers a safe floor whenever healthy and can be started every week.

Marvin Harrison Jr.

WR - Round 8, Pick 78 - Bye 14

Harrison has not lived up to the massive hype surrounding a player drafted fourth overall, though he has faced numerous hurdles outside of his control. Injuries consistently hampered his effectiveness during his first two seasons with Arizona. Before a lingering heel issue ruined his 2025 campaign, he had been tracking slightly ahead of his rookie production levels. He still managed to show marginal improvements in his efficiency metrics, which provided a small amount of optimism for his supporters.

Harrison enters his fourth professional season facing significant changes to his situation. He will be playing in a new offensive scheme under Mike LaFleur and Nathaniel Hackett with 33-year-old Jacoby Brissett at the helm. While the previous regime relied on an extremely high volume of passing attempts for Trey McBride and Michael Wilson, the current leadership may shift toward a run-heavy approach following the arrival of Tyler Allgeier and Jeremiyah Love. He must prove he can outperform Michael Wilson to secure his status as the team's top receiver.

Jonathon Brooks

RB - Round 9, Pick 83 - Bye 5

Brooks was the first running back off the board in the 2024 draft, a second-round selection despite a torn right ACL that ended his college career at Texas. Rather than stashing him for a redshirt year, Carolina liked his rehab enough to debut him in Week 12 as a rookie, but the comeback lasted just two weeks and nine carries before he re-tore the same ACL, an injury that ultimately erased his entire 2025 season too.

Brooks' likeliest path forward is a gradual, complementary introduction as the backup to Chuba Hubbard. That said, Hubbard lost his starting gig to Rico Dowdle in 2025, so the door could open at some point. Everything hinges, though, on whether Brooks can stay upright and recapture his explosiveness after multiple knee surgeries.

Jacory Croskey-Merritt

RB - Round 10, Pick 98 - Bye 7

Few seventh-round picks make the kind of first impression Croskey-Merritt did, when his hot-motor, big-play style vaulted him past incumbent starter Brian Robinson by the end of last August. Robinson was hardly a fixture, but leapfrogging a returning veteran (later traded to San Francisco) still says plenty about how quickly the rookie won over the staff. The explosiveness carried over from his college days at New Mexico and Arizona, as he flashed NFL wheels by ripping off two carries of 40-plus yards.

Croskey-Merritt needs to develop the rest of his game. When the home run isn't available, he tends to dance and bounce in search of daylight rather than salvage the carry by pushing forward, and his ball security was a real problem, with four fumbles on just 184 touches. Cleaning that up and earning passing-down trust would put a clear path to the lead job, especially with Chris Rodriguez off to Jacksonville freeing up goal-line work. Washington added Rachaad White and Jeremy McNichols for third downs, though, and rookie Kaytron Allen is also in the mix.

Kyle Monangai

RB - Round 11, Pick 103 - Bye 10

Monangai was among the better stories to emerge from the 2025 draft, a seventh-round pick out of Rutgers who defied a modest athletic profile. His testing numbers were the concern, as a 4.6 40 at 5-foot-8, 211, grades below the NFL norm for the position. What he lacks in raw tools he offsets with an innate feel for the position, though. He was among the most dependable college backs in recent memory, and remarkably he hasn't put the ball on the ground once in 894 combined college and pro touches.

Monangai's steadiness has a low ceiling, though, because without explosiveness he needs a flood of touchdowns, specifically rushing scores, to move the fantasy needle. His receiving work as a rookie did him no favors either, with a 60.0 percent catch rate and 5.5 yards per target that must climb or his targets will dry up entirely. Monangai profiles as a classic closer who drains clock and plays keepaway, but the splash plays and passing-down duties in Chicago belong to D'Andre Swift.

Ka'imi Fairbairn

K - Round 12, Pick 118 - Bye 8

Fairbairn has stayed in the elite fantasy tier of kickers the last three years, consistently finishing among the top five in points per game—a feat otherwise managed by only Brandon Aubrey. Fairbairn nearly claimed the single-season scoring record in 2025, falling just short due to a pair of missed games, which allowed Jason Myers to claim the title instead.

Fairbairn relied on league-leading volume to power his numbers, highlighted by an immaculate 35-of-35 mark on kicks inside of 50 yards. He also converted 9 of 13 attempts from beyond 50 yards while making every single one of his extra-point tries. Fairbairn may not be attached to a high-powered offense like most of the other top fantasy options at his position, but he's an elite real-life kicker who benefits from Houston's defensive dominance.

Jordan Addison

WR - Round 13, Pick 123 - Bye 6

Addison averaged 13.0 and 14.2 PPR points during his first two NFL campaigns before nosediving to 9.7 per game in 2025 when quarterback J.J. McCarthy derailed Minnesota's perennially productive offense. He didn't help his own cause by recording seven drops, tied for fourth-most among wideouts, while simultaneously bottoming out with career-worst marks in targets per game (5.6), target rate (17.5 percent), catch rate (53.2 percent) and yards per route (1.45). As a downfield-oriented asset, he unsurprisingly proved highly vulnerable to poor quarterback play, though it's worth noting Justin Jefferson and T.J. Hockenson didn't fare much better relative to their respective baselines.

Addison is still just 24 years old and will break in a new quarterback to open the season, presumably catching passes from Kyler Murray. Murray may not match the historical fantasy friendliness of Kirk Cousins or Sam Darnold for his receivers, but the veteran signal-caller should do a far better job than McCarthy of sustaining drives and delivering catchable targets. Minnesota reportedly fully intends to pick up his fifth-year option, keeping him locked in for 2027 at a projected cost of $18 million. For the immediate future, he remains firmly cemented as the Vikings' No. 2 receiver, with his ultimate ceiling riding on Murray's downfield aggressiveness and precision.

Patrick Mahomes

QB - Round 14, Pick 138 - Bye 5

Mahomes' 2025 campaign ended prematurely due to a Week 15 ACL/LCL tear, cutting short what was trending toward a massive fantasy bounce-back year. Before the injury, he was playing some of his most exciting football in years, ranking QB4 in fantasy points per game. He posted career highs in rushing yardage (422) and rushing touchdowns (five) while finally re-engaging the vertical passing game, with a five-year-high 11.4 percent of his attempts traveling 20-plus yards downfield.

Mahomes' rushing volume is now a major question mark as he navigates a lengthy rehab, and the Chiefs have notably shifted their offseason focus toward the backfield and defense rather than adding WRs or TEs. With the team signing RB Kenneth Walker, it is fair to wonder if head coach Andy Reid will lean more on the run to protect his franchise centerpiece. Mahomes will need to regain his vertical efficiency to remain a top-tier fantasy asset, as the current receiving room—led by Rashee Rice, Travis Kelce and Xavier Worthy—remains heavily focused on short-to-intermediate work. He is currently on track for a Week 1 return, but managers must weigh his pedigree against the likelihood of diminished rushing projection and the impact of a shaky supporting cast.

Chargers

DEF - Round 15, Pick 143 - Bye 7

Chris O'Leary takes over as the Chargers' defensive coordinator, bringing a fresh perspective while maintaining the foundational elements that worked so well for Jesse Minter the past two years. The pass rush receives a potential boost from first-round pick Akheem Mesidor, who steps in to replace the departed Odafe Oweh and join a rotation featuring Tuli Tuipulotu and Khalil Mack. The defense is still anchored by versatile safety Derwin James, who can line up as a deep safety, a slot corner or a box safety. With a schedule that includes favorable matchups against Arizona and Las Vegas early in the season, the Chargers D/ST is an ideal late-round pick for fantasy managers hoping to get ahead in September.

DLIN

B+
GRADE

Toilet Bowl King Takes the Draft by Storm, Eyes the Playoffs!

RECORD

10-4-0

POWER

#1

PROJ PTS

1797.56

SEAT

4

SUMMARY

Toilet Bowl King strutted into the draft like a peacock in a room full of pigeons, snagging a solid B+ grade and a projected record of 10-4-0. With a 2nd place finish on the horizon, this team clearly knows how to strut their stuff. Drafting 4th overall, they made some moves that left the competition wondering if they were reading the same playbook. However, it seems like bye week 6 might be a little rough, with three players taking a vacation at the same time. Who knew that fantasy football could be so... scheduled?

While Toilet Bowl King had some stellar picks, they also took a swing and a miss with their worst pick, leaving fans scratching their heads. But hey, every great team has its quirks, right? With the toughest schedule looming, they'll need to channel their inner gladiators to survive the season. But fear not, as their projected points of 1797.56 suggest they're ready to battle it out. So, buckle up, because it looks like Toilet Bowl King is gearing up for a wild ride this season!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Tee Higgins

WR - Round 4, Pick 37 - Bye 6

2025 PTS
182.10

2026 PTS
186.13

WORST DRAFT PICK

Harold Fannin Jr.

TE - Round 7, Pick 64 - Bye 11

2025 PTS
150.40

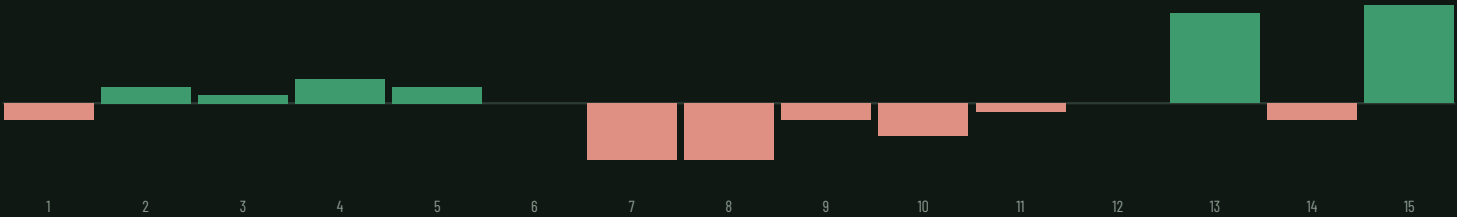

2026 PTS
141.02

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK - ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.04	Jonathan Taylor	RB	6.2	-2	Ind
2.07	De'Von Achane	RB	15.3	+2	Mia
3.04	George Pickens	WR	22.5	+1	Dal
4.07	Tee Higgins BEST	WR	33.6	+3	Cin
5.04	Cam Skattebo	RB	42.4	+2	NYG
6.07	Jalen Hurts	QB	56.5	+0	Phi
7.04	Harold Fannin Jr. WORST	TE	70.7	-7	Cle
8.07	Brian Thomas Jr.	WR	84.0	-7	Jax
9.04	Rico Dowdle	RB	86.4	-2	Pit
10.07	Michael Wilson	WR	100.5	-4	Ari
11.04	Stefon Diggs	WR	104.8	-1	Was
12.07	Jake Ferguson	TE	117.4	+0	Dal
13.04	Jared Goff	QB	113.4	+11	Det
14.07	Tyler Loop	K	139.3	-2	Bal
15.04	Vikings	DST	131.7	+12	Min

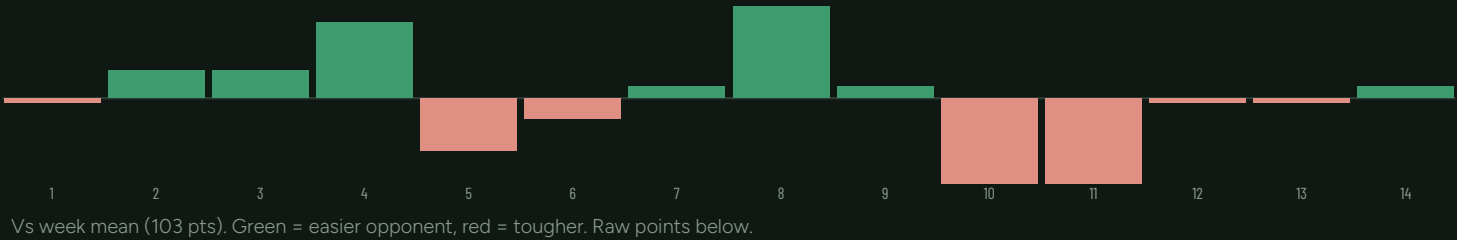

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Jonathan Taylor

RB - Round 1, Pick 4 - Bye 13

Daniel Jones' offseason arrival in Indianapolis didn't necessarily rocket Taylor to the top of draft boards last summer. But through the Colts' first 10 games nobody in fantasy was more valuable than Taylor, thanks in large part to a fully functioning offense with Jones at the helm. Taylor poured in a league-high 27.2 PPR points per game over that span, tracking toward more than 2,400 scrimmage yards and nearly 30 touchdowns.

Taylor's final tally still impressed, with 20 scores (18 rushing) and a career-high 46 catches, but it fell well shy of that torrid early pace once his average nosedived to 12.9 PPR points across the closing seven games. The Colts' schedule got harder and some regression was probably unavoidable, but it wouldn't have been this severe with a healthy quarterback. A fibula fracture sapped Jones' mobility after the bye, and an Achilles tear in Week 14 threw the offense into disarray. Jones' recovery will heavily shape whether Taylor rewards a first-round pick this season, though his talent alone justifies the billing. Even with a gimpy Jones, Taylor should pay off.

De'Von Achane

RB - Round 2, Pick 17 - Bye 6

Undersized at 5-foot-9, 188, Achane is nonetheless one of the league's best fantasy running backs. His slight frame likely caps him near the 238 carries he handled last season, but the upside baked into his profile more than compensates, thanks to a lethal blend of breakaway speed and elite receiving production. It's easy to forgive the modest volume projection given a career average of 5.6 yards per carry, a mark propelled by an absurd 12 rushes of 40-plus yards on just 544 attempts. Losing coach Mike McDaniel and his innovative playcalling is more of a disappointment than a genuine alarm, since Achane repeatedly generated yardage well beyond what was schemed and blocked.

Achane's bigger issue is the quarterback shift from Tua Tagovailoa to Malik Willis. Tagovailoa funneled a steady diet of check-downs to Achane, whereas Willis figures to scramble or look deep in those same spots. Should his receptions dip, there's no guarantee his rushing makes up the difference, as topping last year's 5.7 YPC and 12 total touchdowns on a rebuilding team is a tall order.

George Pickens

WR - Round 3, Pick 24 - Bye 14

Traded from Pittsburgh to Dallas last offseason, Pickens exploded for career highs in every major receiving category. The Cowboys were pleased, yet announced this offseason that they didn't intend to sign Pickens to an extension, instead keeping him around on just a franchise tag. Remaining with the Cowboys probably represents the best scenario for Pickens' fantasy outlook, if not his wallet. He established massive early value when CeeDee Lamb missed three contests, and his production barely slipped later in the season once the roster returned to full strength.

Pickens maintained an elite pace over the final 10 games alongside Lamb, averaging 89.5 yards and 8.6 targets per week. Pickens slightly outproduced his star teammate in yardage over that stretch despite seeing a fractionally lower target share. The Cowboys also have solid complementary weapons, but there should be enough to go around for both Lamb and Pickens as long as QB Dak Prescott enjoys another healthy campaign.

Tee Higgins

WR - Round 4, Pick 37 - Bye 6

Higgins, as always, is a strong bet to outperform his ADP if both he and Joe Burrow enjoy relatively healthy seasons. Last year, Higgins mostly avoided his typical lower-body injuries and suited up for 15 contests, scoring 11 TDs along the way. However, the touchdown barrage masked his disappointing volume during Burrow's extended absence; backup QB Joe Flacco locked in on Ja'Marr Chase and rarely looked elsewhere besides for a check-downs.

Higgins quickly corrected course when Burrow returned late in the season, averaging 67.8 yards and 7.0 targets per game down the stretch while scoring four touchdowns. As a threat to catch both deep passes and red-zone jump balls, Higgins doesn't necessarily need huge volume to produce strong fantasy scores. He's even shown a low-end WR1 fantasy ceiling with Chase healthy, though WR2 value might be the more reasonable expectation for 2026.

Cam Skattebo

RB - Round 5, Pick 44 - Bye 8

Skattebo emerged with an exciting rookie experience before it was cut cruelly short last season. A fourth-round pick out of Arizona State, he seized control of the Giants' backfield by late September and quickly ranked among the league's premier fantasy workhorses, blending bruising power with high-end receiving production. That made his Week 8 injury all the more gut-wrenching for his fantasy managers, as a dislocated ankle ended his season right after a six-game run of double-digit outings in half-point PPR.

Skattebo is expected to reclaim starting role this season, assuming he returns to full health. His elusiveness and pass-catching versatility make him a natural three-down back, and the surrounding pieces should trend up as quarterback Jaxon Dart matures and No. 10 overall pick Francis Mauigoa reinforces the offensive line. With new coach John Harbaugh installing a run-first approach, a healthy Skattebo profiles as the clear workhorse, even with Tyrone Tracy carving out a complementary role.

Jalen Hurts

QB - Round 6, Pick 57 - Bye 10

Hurts finished as a disappointing QB8 in fantasy for the second consecutive year in 2025, and this time he couldn't blame health as a major factor. He actually saw an uptick in pass attempts and threw a career-high 25 touchdowns, but his yardage efficiency declined and his signature rushing production dipped. The famous "Tush Push" lost some of its potency, converting at a middling rate after years of dominance.

Hurts' scramble rate also dropped to a career low, despite the struggles around him. The Eagles hired former Packers coach Sean Mannion as offensive coordinator this offseason to help integrate more play-action and intermediate passing concepts, areas where Hurts has been inconsistent. With A.J. Brown traded to New England, the team is hoping rookie WR Makai Lemon (first round) and rookie TE Eli Stowers (second round) can make an impact in Year 1. A rebound year for the Philadelphia offensive line is the key to Hurts' value; if the blocking returns to elite form, he can reclaim his goal-line dominance and potentially improve his passing efficiency even with Brown gone. However, there's also a downside scenario where his scrambling and Tush Push production don't recover and neither does Philadelphia's passing game.

Harold Fannin Jr.

TE - Round 7, Pick 64 - Bye 11

Fannin paced the Browns with 72 catches, 731 yards, and six touchdowns last season, making a seamless transition from the Mid-American Conference to the AFC North. He carved out a massive role almost immediately, and he ultimately finished fifth among TEs with 107 targets even after missing Week 18 with a groin injury. At 6-foot-4, 241, Fannin is undersized for the position but nonetheless pushed David Njoku out of the starting job in a hurry.

Njoku is gone now, replaced this offseason by fifth-round pick Joe Royer and blocking specialist Joe Stoll. Even with minimal competition at his own position, Fannin arguably faces tougher target competition overall this year, following the additions of highly drafted wideouts KC Concepcion and Denzel Boston. The bigger concern is QB play, but Fannin at least looks like the early favorite to lead Cleveland in targets under new head coach Todd Monken.

Brian Thomas Jr.

WR - Round 8, Pick 77 - Bye 7

Thomas stands out as one of 2025's biggest fantasy busts after managing just 707 yards and two scores across 14 games, a massive drop-off from his dominant rookie finish. Selected 23rd overall in 2024, the 6-foot-3, 209 wideout immediately capitalized on his 4.33 speed to post a massive 87-1,282-10 line. Jacksonville's offense actually took a major step forward last season under new head coach Liam Coen, yet the unit's success surprisingly coincided with a reduced role for its highly hyped second-year receiver. The passing attack instead leaned heavily on Parker Washington and Jakobi Meyers, leaving preseason favorites out in the cold.

Thomas did show genuine improvement late in the year after drawing early criticism for dropped passes, missed assignments and a general shyness through contact. Even as Washington completely dominated Trevor Lawrence's attention down the stretch, the speedy deep threat eventually found ways to contribute chunk plays on lower volume. He arguably still offers the highest fantasy ceiling among Jacksonville's receiving corps, though the frustrating inconsistency has led to him frequently coming off the board a full round after Washington in early 2026 drafts.

Rico Dowdle

RB - Round 9, Pick 84 - Bye 9

After seizing the starting job in Dallas in 2024, Dowdle signed a one-year deal with Carolina last season. He began the season backing up incumbent Chuba Hubbard, but a Week 4 calf injury to Hubbard cracked open the door for Dowdle. The next two weeks, he exploded for 389 rushing yards and a touchdown at 7.3 per carry while chipping in seven catches for 84 yards and another score. Opponent defenses (Dallas, Miami) deserve a share of the credit for that outburst, as he managed just 3.8 yards per carry across his other 15 games, but consecutive seasons of quality production have earned him the benefit of the doubt as a legitimate NFL starter.

Dowdle signed a two-year, $12.25 million contract this offseason with the Steelers where he will share the backfield with the versatile Jaylen Warren. Kenneth Gainwell left for Tampa Bay, so there should be plenty of work for Dowdle, who has developed into a reliable receiver (a 78.8 percent catch rate since 2024).

Michael Wilson

WR - Round 10, Pick 97 - Bye 14

Wilson experienced a 2025 season that closely mirrored his previous two years, characterized by steady playing time but inconsistent target volume. He saw a slight uptick in usage during the middle of the season, but there was no immediate indication of a major breakout. Once teammate Marvin Harrison went down with a foot injury in Week 10, he saw his role explode as he became the primary option for Jacoby Brissett.

Wilson capitalized on that opportunity by averaging 11 targets per game over the final two months of the season. This high-level production was clearly aided by the absence of Marvin Harrison and an unsustainable volume of team passing attempts from Jacoby Brissett. Whether he can maintain that level of success remains a major question mark for the upcoming year. He will likely face much stiffer competition for targets once Marvin Harrison, Trey McBride, and Jeremiyah Love are back to full health.

Stefon Diggs

WR - Round 11, Pick 104 - Bye 7

Legal issues have overshadowed Diggs' entire offseason, as he pleaded not guilty in February to charges stemming from a Dec. 2 dispute. The Patriots released him in March, with his cap number and the ongoing legal situation both seemingly playing a role, and the 32-year-old was still searching for a team after the 2026 NFL Draft. That being said, the lack of a signed contract doesn't indicate a lack of interested suitors. His 2025 performance was genuinely impressive for any receiver his age, and it looked even more remarkable considering he was returning from a midseason ACL tear suffered in Houston the year before.

Diggs operated on a strictly managed snap count in 2025, yet only four wide receivers exceeded his 2.74 yards per route run, and just 13 bested his 27.0 percent target rate. The caveat is that nearly all of that production arrived on short throws, highlighted by an 8.5 average depth of target, a trend that also defined the latter portion of his Buffalo tenure and his single season in Houston in 2024. The elite vertical explosiveness might be gone, but he excelled as a reliable possession option last season and could easily provide a similar profile moving forward. For fantasy managers, the upside is legitimate, and it sounds like legal issues are unlikely to result in a suspension.

Jake Ferguson

TE - Round 12, Pick 117 - Bye 14

Ferguson reeled in a career-high 82 passes last season while functioning as a safety valve, albeit with major fluctuations in volume. He also re-established himself near the goal line after a zero-TD campaign in 2024, seeing a spike in red-zone volume when CeeDee Lamb was out injured early in the season. Ferguson otherwise operates as a distant third option in the passing game behind CeeDee Lamb and George Pickens.

Ferguson saw his production plummet after a Week 10 bye, averaging a meager 27.0 yards on 4.5 targets over his final eight appearances. He posted a career-low 7.3 yards per catch for the season, limiting his upside in standard scoring formats even when he saw plenty of targets. While steady dump-off looks in an up-tempo offense should keep Ferguson fantasy-relevant in PPR leagues, there's risk he falls off the map in standard-scoring formats if the TDs dry up again.

Jared Goff

QB - Round 13, Pick 124 - Bye 6

Goff finished QB9 in fantasy last year, his third straight top-10 campaign, while ranking second in the league in both passing yards and touchdowns. He is a high-floor player who thrives by throwing a high volume of short passes to YAC-friendly receivers, though he provides almost zero rushing utility and rarely attacks downfield. The Lions' scheme-which benefited from a massive 2,536 yards after the catch last year-is transitioning under new play-caller Drew Petzing, who hopes to bring a more play-action-heavy approach to Detroit. The team's commitment to the offensive line, headlined by first-round pick Blake Miller, should ensure that Goff stays upright and protected.

Goff has Amon-Ra St. Brown and Jameson Williams both coming off strong seasons and TE Sam LaPorta expected back healthy from back surgery. It's one of the best pass-catching groups in the league, supplemented by do-everything RB Jahmyr Gibbs. Playing home games in a dome also helps, though Goff's famous home-away splits and minimal rushing production mean he's better as a platoon QB than an every-week starter in single-QB leagues.

Tyler Loop

K - Round 14, Pick 137 - Bye 13

Loop enters his sophomore campaign looking to bounce back from a shanked field goal on the final play of the 2025 regular season. Before his primetime miss, he'd been highly reliable on short attempts while struggling to show deep range, finishing just 1-for-4 on kicks from 50-plus yards. He averaged a modest 8.0 fantasy points per contest amidst a disappointing season for Baltimore's offense (and defense).

Loop will likely get another shot given that Baltimore spent a sixth-round pick on him last spring, but he may not have the coaching staff's confidence to try long field goals outside of end-of-half situations. Fantasy value will thus depend on piling up a huge volume of PATs and shorter kicks, which relies on the Ravens improving considerably after missing the playoffs last year.

Vikings

DEF - Round 15, Pick 144 - Bye 6

Minnesota continues to prioritize an aggressive 3-4 blitzing identity under coordinator Brian Flores, though the roster underwent significant changes in the trenches this offseason. The departure of OLB Jonathan Greenard to Philadelphia left a substantial void, until the team brought in first-round pick Caleb Banks and third-round pick Domonique Orange to solidify the defensive front. While the personnel looks solid, Flores' playcalling remains the primary driver of fantasy value, as he consistently finds ways to generate pressure even without a standout sack artist on the roster. Trading Greenard while needing to replace the production of Jonathan Allen (now with Cincinnati) suggests the team is banking on schematic wizardry over raw talent again. While the lack of superstars on the depth chart remains a concern in some matchups, Flores' track record of overwhelming subpar QBs means the Vikings D/ST should always be monitored, if not rostered.

PABLO

F

GRADE

He was #1 Drafts Like They Were Playing in a Different League!

RECORD

3-11-0

POWER

#10

PROJ PTS

1688.13

SEAT

5

SUMMARY

Well, well, well, if it isn't He was #1, who decided to take the scenic route through the draft. With a stellar F grade, they might as well have been drafting with their eyes closed! Picking 5th, they had plenty of chances to snag some gems, but instead, they seemed to have a penchant for reaching. Their projected record of 3-11-0 has them sitting pretty at the bottom of the standings, and let's just say, the schedule isn't going to do them any favors either, ranking as the 2nd toughest in the league.

With only 2 players on bye week 13, it seems He was #1 will have some time to regroup... or perhaps just stare at their roster in disbelief. The best pick was a slight win at 45, but the worst pick? Oh boy, that was a head-scratcher at 25 when the ADP was 67. Talk about a classic case of overzealous drafting! As the season unfolds, let's hope He was #1 can find a way to turn this ship around, or at least provide some entertainment as they navigate through the storm!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Tetairoa McMillan

WR - Round 5, Pick 45 - Bye 5

2025 PTS

176.40

2026 PTS

180.85

WORST DRAFT PICK

Caleb Williams

QB - Round 3, Pick 25 - Bye 10

2025 PTS

324.68

2026 PTS

285.77

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK - ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.05	Puka Nacua	WR	5.0	+0	LAR
2.06	Derrick Henry	RB	17.1	-1	Bal
3.05	Caleb Williams WORST	QB	66.6	-42	Chi
4.06	Breece Hall	RB	34.6	+1	NYJ
5.05	Tetairoa McMillan BEST	WR	41.9	+3	Car
6.06	Brandon Aubrey	K	87.4	-31	Dal
7.05	Kyle Pitts Sr.	TE	72.1	-7	Atl
8.06	Tony Pollard	RB	86.0	-10	Ten
9.05	Texans	DST	94.1	-9	Hou
10.06	Quentin Johnston	WR	108.8	-13	LAC
11.05	Jordan Mason	RB	112.0	-7	Min
12.06	Juwan Johnson	TE	123.3	-7	NO
13.05	De'Zhaun Stripling	WR	108.8	+16	SF
14.06	Dalton Schultz	TE	126.3	+10	Hou
15.05	Cairo Santos	K	144.1	+1	Chi

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

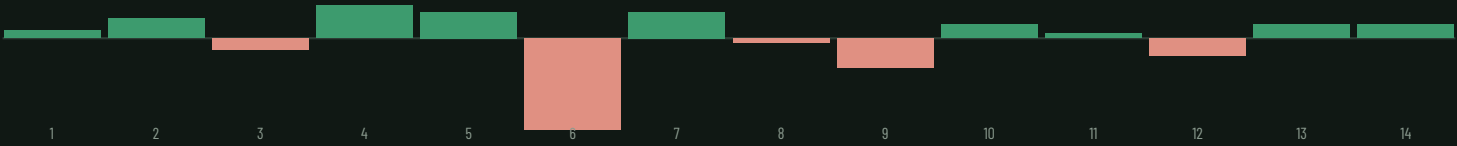

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (103 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
104	106	101	108	107	88	107	102	98	105	103	100	105	105

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Puka Nacua

WR - Round 1, Pick 5 - Bye 11

Off-field concerns and injuries look like the only obstacles standing between Nacua and another high-end-WR1 performance in fantasy. He sparked significant public interest over the winter due to unusual behavior that led to a March visit to a holistic treatment facility. A few months before that, he wrapped up to 2025 regular season with 129 catches, 1,715 yards, and 10 touchdowns. He then sustained that momentum through three playoff games, securing 24 receptions for 332 yards and a pair of scores. Nacua dominated on a per-snap basis, pacing the league with 3.80 yards per route run and a 36.1 percent target rate. He even expanded his deep game by catching 13 passes that went 20-plus yards downfield.

Nacua operated with a relatively low 75.1 percent route share to stay fresh and maximize his per-route explosiveness. He averaged a position-leading 23.5 PPR points per game despite Davante Adams commanding a massive 34.8 percent red zone target share. Los Angeles evaluated offseason trades involving Adams, yet opted for continuity by keeping every 2025 offensive starter under contract. Assuming Nacua is healthy and focused, he should put up huge numbers again.

Derrick Henry

RB - Round 2, Pick 16 - Bye 13

Henry's resume is stitched together from things that shouldn't be physically possible. Backs listed at 6-foot-3, 247, aren't supposed to exist, because humans that size aren't built to move the way he does or age as gracefully as he has. He's as tough to tackle as any back in the league, as defenders who hit him high crumble and those who go low rarely amount to more than speed bumps. At 32, the annual risk of a sudden cliff climbs, yet there's been little sign of even gradual erosion.

Henry again cleared 5.0 yards per carry on 300-plus rushes in 2025, salvaging an uneven year, three fumbles lost included, with a dominant December that kept Baltimore in the playoff race. He thrived with Lamar Jackson sidelined late, but a Jackson rebound under new coordinator Declan Doyle should only help. The interior offensive line is worth watching, with the arrivals of rookie guard Olaivavega Ioane and veteran guard John Simpson and the loss of center Tyler Linderbaum. Fullback Patrick Ricard is also gone. Still, Baltimore remains a premier landing spot for touchdown production, and Henry should have plenty again.

Caleb Williams

QB - Round 3, Pick 25 - Bye 10

The Bears retooled their staff and offensive line to help Williams in his second year, and he responded by leading Chicago to the playoffs and finishing as the QB5 in fantasy. It could have been even better, as a league-high 28 drops from his receivers deprived him of significant yardage and prevented him from hitting the 4,000-yard mark. Williams showed flashes of elite accuracy, but he also missed too many easy throws, and his completion percentage was further hampered by the shaky play of those around him. He remained one of the league's most effective scramblers, even as his designed rushing attempts dropped from his rookie season.

Williams saw the offense undergo one major change this offseason, losing DJ Moore but retaining a talented young trio of receiving threats in Rome Odunze, Luther Burden and Colston Loveland. It remains an excellent situation for a developing quarterback, thanks in large part to coach Ben Johnson. If Williams can improve his accuracy metrics, he has the right playing style to be an excellent fantasy quarterback for years to come.

Breece Hall

RB - Round 4, Pick 36 - Bye 13

Hall signed a three-year, $45.8 million deal this offseason to stay in New York, much to the chagrin of many of his fantasy fans. He's one of the better running backs in the league, but years of team failure and workload meddling have consistently sabotaged his production. Hall totaled 1,415 scrimmage yards last season with five touchdowns, despite the team often in a passing-attack comeback mode.

Hall could have a better go of it this year if new offensive coordinator Frank Reich clears an admittedly low bar, and new quarterback Geno Smith is a meaningful upgrade over Justin Fields and Tyrod Taylor. Smith should help Hall's PPR value, since plays that became incompletions or scrambles under Fields could turn into targets for one of the NFL's premier receiving backs. Braelon Allen still looms as a threat for short-yardage and goal-line carries, so touchdowns might stay scarce, but Hall's yardage and receptions should climb.

Tetairoa McMillan

WR - Round 5, Pick 45 - Bye 5

Subpar quarterback play in Carolina could not prevent an impressive rookie campaign from McMillan. He established himself as a quality starter from his first day in the league and ultimately went over 1,000 receiving yards. He tied for 11th in the league with 10 receptions 20-plus yards downfield, and he added another 24 catches in the intermediate range of 10 to 19 yards. McMillan rarely received screens or freebie targets, but he has the YAC skills and raw strength to thrive on those looks if he eventually gets them.

McMillan also has the right blend of size and speed to rip off big plays and touchdowns, though his offensive environment is far from ideal. Last year, he ranked 21st among receivers with 12.5 PPR points per game, 26th with 1.97 yards per route, and 30th with a 23.1 percent target rate. Perhaps more impressive, McMillan averaged 8.2 yards per target in a system where QB Bryce Young managed just 6.3 yards per attempt. The quarterback play may not be much different this year, but there's room for McMillan to capture a larger target share in a shaky-looking offense where Jalen Coker is the only other surefire starter at the skill positions.

Brandon Aubrey

K - Round 6, Pick 56 - Bye 14

Aubrey has his own tier at the kicker position after finishing as a top-three fantasy option in each of his first three professional seasons. He benefits from a high-powered Dallas offense that routinely ranks near the top of the league in total play volume and drives across midfield-and Aubrey doesn't need to be far past midfield in order to convert.

Aubrey again capitalized on his elite opportunity environment in 2025, posting another season in the all-time Top 10 for kicker fantasy scoring (a list dominated by Aubrey and contemporaries). Aubrey has been so effective that he sometimes gets long field-goal opportunities when the Cowboys might be better off punting or going for it. Fantasy managers won't complain, nor will they argue with the benefits of being attached to a fast-paced, efficient offense that plays home games under a roof. Long story short, Aubrey offers both the highest floor and highest ceiling among kickers.

Kyle Pitts Sr.

TE - Round 7, Pick 65 - Bye 11

Pitts capped an impressive 2025 campaign as the overall TE2 in PPR formats, rewarding fantasy managers for their unwavering patience after years of unfulfilled breakout hype. He dominated the month of December, finishing the season with an 88-928-5 line after entering Week 13 with just 459 yards and one TD. Pitts notably put up 166 yards and three of his five TDs against the Buccaneers in Week 15, with Kirk Cousins at quarterback.

Pitts returns to an Atlanta offense where Tua Tagovailoa and Michael Penix are expected to compete for the starting QB job under new coach Kevin Stefanski. There's not much doubt Pitts will be the third option in Atlanta's offense, behind RB Bijan Robinson and WR Drake London but clearly ahead of everyone else. After getting a franchise tag earlier this offseason, Pitts ended up signing a long-term contract this spring to stay in Atlanta. While last December's volume surge is unlikely to carry over, Pitts should at least see enough work to stay at the low end of the TE1 map, with upside for more if he's emphasized in the new offensive system.

Tony Pollard

RB - Round 8, Pick 76 - Bye 9

Pollard made his mark as a big-play specialist for the Cowboys a few years ago, but in Tennessee the last two years he has swallowed a punishing workload as an interior grinder. The Titans increased Pollard's ground work while protecting injury-prone teammate Tyjae Spears, who got more work with his receiving skills. That hurt Pollard, who is capable of far more than the 33 receptions he managed last season.

Pollard flashed a flex-worthy floor as the lead runner for recent dreadful Titans teams, and there could be more in the tank if the offense finally takes a step forward under new coordinator Brian Daboll. The Titans drafted Nicholas Singleton in the fifth round and return Spears, who still figures to handle passing downs and change-of-pace duty, but team-wide improvement could preserve Pollard's hefty workload while adding red-zone chances.

Texans

DEF - Round 9, Pick 85 - Bye 8

Houston enters 2026 looking to build on an elite showing in 2025, largely maintaining continuity under coordinator Matt Burke. After suffering a minor loss in free agency with DT Tim Settle departing for Washington, the Texans' front office acted aggressively to fill the gap, trading up to select DT Kayden McDonald with the 36th overall pick. The organization is betting heavily on the secondary's as well, securing former Eagles safety Reed Blankenship on a three-year, $24.5 million contract to improve a unit that's already borderline-elite. This solid offseason complements an existing core of superstars, led by edge rushers Will Anderson and Danielle Hunter and shutdown corner Derek Stingley. Despite the first-rate talent, Houston's fantasy consistency may be tested early with matchups against the Bills and Bengals to start the season. Patience should be rewarded later in the season, as no team besides maybe the Rams has comparable star power on defense.

Quentin Johnston

WR - Round 10, Pick 96 - Bye 7

Johnston answered a disastrous 2023 rookie campaign by making major contributions to the Chargers over the past two years, putting up highly useful receiving lines of 55-711-8 and 51-735-8. Frustrating drops remain an issue and his target volume fluctuates, but he has been highly effective downfield overall, scoring eight touchdowns since 2024 on targets traveling at least 20 air yards. Last year he appeared on the verge of a true breakout early on, averaging 5.2 catches for 75.4 yards and 0.8 touchdowns over the first five weeks on 8.0 targets per game.

Johnston saw that momentum completely stall after a Week 6 hamstring injury forced him to sit out, leading to a midseason slump and an inconsistent stretch run while playing behind a heavily depleted offensive line. His full-season mark of 12.5 PPR points set a new personal high, but his production tumbled to just 9.0 PPR points and 37.8 yards per game across his final 10 appearances, including the playoffs. A fresh start under new offensive coordinator Mike McDaniel gives him a great opportunity to get back on track, though 2025 second-round pick Tre' Harris could challenge for starting snaps if the transition hits early speed bumps.

Jordan Mason

RB - Round 11, Pick 105 - Bye 6

Mason has become one of the more reliable pure runners in the league, pulling off the rare trick of averaging 5.1 yards per carry on his first 395 professional attempts. That mark carries extra weight given how he compiles it, as he's a between-the-tackles power back rather than a runner padding his average on draws or catching defenses unprepared. He grinds out his yardage with the defense squared up and ready. Two meaningful obstacles cap his ceiling, though. The first is a near-total absence from the passing game, as he's drawn just 34 targets on 947 snaps to this point. The second, and more worrisome, is a fumbling habit that's cropped up the last two years, with six giveaways on only 337 touches from scrimmage.

Mason's impressive running ability evaporates in a hurry when he's putting the ball on the ground, and a rate near one fumble per 50 touches could eventually eat into his role if it persists. For now, a diminished Aaron Jones clears the way for Mason to remain Minnesota's preferred interior runner, with Jones handling passing downs and space touches. He'd firm up his fantasy value if he can just hang onto the ball.

Juwan Johnson

TE - Round 12, Pick 116 - Bye 8

Johnson logged three or more receptions in 15 of his 17 starts during the 2025 campaign, seeing consistent target volume in a fast-paced offense with limited alternatives. He quietly finished in the top five among tight ends in both total catches and receiving yards, ranking fourth in routes run (504) while maintaining solid per-route numbers. The only disappointment was a lack of touchdowns, with Johnson scoring just three for the second straight year.

Johnson developed a strong rapport with young quarterback Tyler Shough down the stretch, but there's more competition for TE snaps after the Saints signed Noah Fant and drafted Oscar Delp (fifth round). While Johnson is a clear choice to handle passing situations, he could lose some of the early down snaps that he got last season. He also faces increased target competition from the WR position after the Saints drafted Jordyn Tyson eighth overall. The most likely scenario puts Johnson somewhere between his 2024 production (2.9 catches for 32.2 yards per game) and his 2025 breakout (4.5 catches for 52.3 yards).

De'Zhaun Stribling

WR - Round 13, Pick 125 - Bye 8

Stribling far exceeded his consensus mid-round projection when the 49ers aggressively traded out of the first round to secure him with the 33rd overall pick. While critics questioned whether the front office reached, the draft-day maneuvering shouldn't distract fantasy managers from his upside as a highly compelling sleeper option. Turning 24 in December, his advanced age is mitigated by early breakout metrics at Washington State, where he posted 44-471-5 and 51-602-2 lines before a fractured arm at Oklahoma State temporarily stalled his trajectory. He bounced back brilliantly in 2025, recording 55 catches for 811 yards and six scores for a playoff-bound Ole Miss squad.

Stribling enters a San Francisco wide receiver room topped by Mike Evans with veterans Deebo Samuel, Christian Kirk and Demarcus Robinson competing for snaps after Ricky Pearsall underwent season-ending surgery. While earning playing time could still be difficult early on, Stribling is in a better position with Pearsall out for the year.

Dalton Schultz

TE - Round 14, Pick 136 - Bye 8

Schultz enjoyed a career year in terms of pure volume in 2025, acting as a trusted chain-mover for C.J. Stroud in the low-octane Houston Offense. The veteran tight end corralled 82 passes on 106 targets, missing his career-high yardage mark by a mere 31 yards. Schultz has seen his goal-line contributions vanish, however, logging just five total touchdowns over his last two seasons combined.

Schultz appears locked in as Houston's top receiving threat at tight end, with a solid chance to be Option B in the passing game after wideout Jayden Higgins suffered an ACL tear this summer. It's essentially the same story as in past seasons, with Schultz projecting as a bottom-end TE1 or solid TE2, but without the ceiling to merit a draft pick in most leagues.

Cairo Santos

K - Round 15, Pick 145 - Bye 10

Santos experienced a moderate bounce-back campaign last year as an improved Chicago offense lifted his overall scoring opportunities. He finished near the middle of the pack in fantasy production, balancing out a dismal 2024 season where his team managed just four wins. Santos remains highly dependable on short- and intermediate-range attempts, while his long-range volume leaves much to be desired.

Santos must also contend with kicking outdoors at Soldier Field, which can be especially challenging late in the year. The 34-year-old veteran does not warrant draft-day investment in standard fantasy formats, but he's at least toward the top of streaming lists once the season is under way. Santos enters the summer with secure job status and no immediate threats to his starting role on the roster.

ASG

D-

GRADE

11 Shots In Drafts Like a Pro... at a Beginner's Workshop!

RECORD

4-10-0

POWER

#9

PROJ PTS

1703.06

SEAT

6

SUMMARY

Well, well, well, if it isn't 11 Shots In, coming in hot with a D- draft grade! Picking 6th in a 10-team league, they managed to assemble a roster that might just have the potential to redefine mediocrity. With a projected record of 4-10-0, it seems like they might be more likely to take a victory lap in the wrong direction. The schedule isn't doing them any favors either, ranking as the 5th toughest, which is like being the 5th fastest tortoise in a race.

Despite the rocky start, 11 Shots In did snag George Kittle at pick 95, a steal considering the ADP of 83-let's just call that a small victory in an otherwise uphill battle. However, the highlight of their draft might just be the head-scratching choice of Tyler Warren at 35, who was expected to go much later. With two players on bye week 11, it looks like 11 Shots In will have to channel their inner Houdini to pull off some magic this season. Good luck, 11 Shots In, you're going to need it!

BEST DRAFT PICK

George Kittle

TE - Round 10, Pick 95 - Bye 8

2025 PTS

133.00

2026 PTS

129.70

WORST DRAFT PICK

Tyler Warren

TE - Round 4, Pick 35 - Bye 13

2025 PTS

150.50

2026 PTS

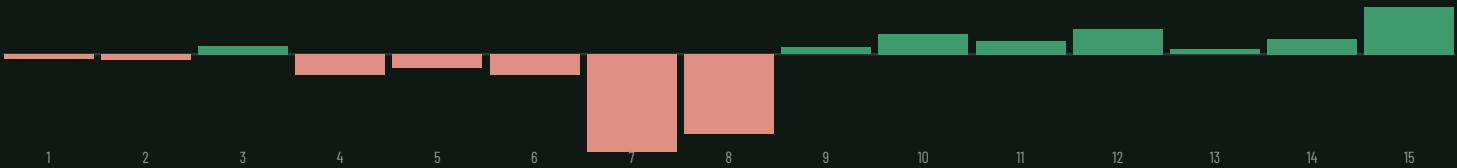

166.56

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK – ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.06	Jaxon Smith-Njigba	WR	7.3	-1	Sea
2.05	Omarion Hampton	RB	18.1	-3	LAC
3.06	Josh Allen	QB	20.7	+5	Buf
4.05	Tyler Warren WORST	TE	47.0	-12	Ind
5.06	Bucky Irving	RB	53.9	-8	TB
6.05	TreVeyon Henderson	RB	67.2	-12	NE
7.06	Eagles	DST	123.8	-58	Phi
8.05	Jason Myers	K	121.8	-47	Sea
9.06	Carnell Tate	WR	81.7	+4	Ten
10.05	George Kittle BEST	TE	82.5	+12	SF
11.06	Dalton Kincaid	TE	97.5	+8	Buf
12.05	Matthew Stafford	QB	99.6	+15	LAR
13.06	Mike Washington Jr.	RB	123.5	+2	LV
14.05	49ers	DST	126.3	+9	SF
15.06	Makai Lemon	WR	117.5	+28	Phi

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

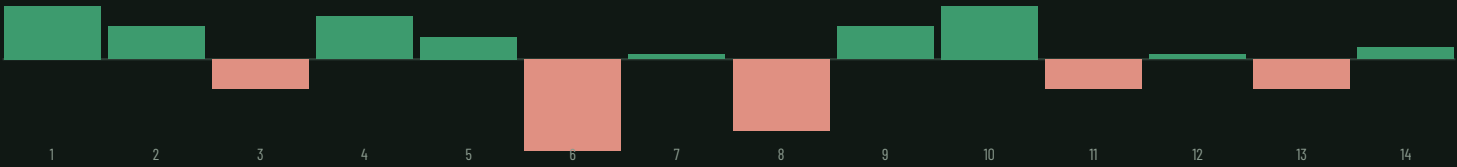

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (102 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
107	105	99	106	104	93	102	95	105	107	99	102	99	103

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Jaxon Smith-Njigba

WR - Round 1, Pick 6 - Bye 11

Entering his third season, Smith-Njigba erased all doubts regarding his ability to transition away from full-time slot duties. He captured Offensive Player of the Year honors and a Super Bowl ring while ascending into the top 10 of the all-time single-season receiving yardage list. The talented wideout paced the NFL with 1,366 perimeter receiving yards just one season after leading the league in slot production. He dominated defensive backs at every depth, securing a league-high 16 receptions for 614 yards on passes traveling 20 or more yards downfield. He added an unmatched 43 catches for 712 yards on intermediate throws between 10 and 19 yards. Staggering efficiency fueled this breakout, as his 3.85 yards per route run trailed only one other receiver over the previous decade.

Smith-Njigba accomplished these historic feats despite operating within a Seattle offense that ranked 29th in total pass attempts. He commanded a league-best 32.6 percent target share and accounted for an NFL-high 44.1 percent of the team's receiving yards. The Seahawks face potential efficiency regression following the departures of coordinator Klint Kubiak and running back Kenneth Walker, though the remaining talent still looks solidly above average. Losing those key pieces also introduces a realistic scenario where quarterback Sam Darnold attempts significantly more passes to offset any drop in efficiency.

Omarion Hampton

RB - Round 2, Pick 15 - Bye 7

Hampton flashed unmistakable promise and fantasy upside as a rookie, averaging 4.4 yards per carry with five touchdowns in nine games. At 6-foot, 221, Hampton brings pass-catching chops to go with his between-the-tackles ability. He dominated at North Carolina, stacking back-to-back 1,500-yard rushing seasons, then tested impressively at the 2025 combine with a 4.46 40 and a 130-inch broad jump. The Chargers drafted him 22nd overall, and his abbreviated debut largely justified that conviction, as only a left ankle fracture (eight games) and a later right ankle sprain derailed a legitimate Rookie of the Year push. Hampton's injury was one of many for the Chargers' offense, including along the offensive line.

Hampton and the line are healthy entering training camp, and new coordinator Mike McDaniel inherits a full toolbox to fix a lackluster offense, though speedy addition Keaton Mitchell could nibble at the outside carries. A fantasy breakout for Hampton is reasonable, provided he stays healthy.

Josh Allen

QB - Round 3, Pick 26 - Bye 7

Despite playing just one snap in Week 18 last year, Allen finished as fantasy's highest-scoring quarterback for the fourth time in six years. He got a career-high 22 carries inside the 10-yard line, scoring on 13 of them, and he averaged a career-high 8.0 yards per pass attempt. His 7.2 aDOT was a career low, but he was highly accurate on those throws, completing 69.3 percent of his passes with a 1.5 percent CPOE (Completion Percentage Over Expected). The Bills lacked quality downfield options, and Allen finished with his fewest pass attempts (460) since his rookie year. He, of course, made up for the lack of pass volume with elite rushing production, leading all QBs with 579 rushing yards and 14 touchdowns - his third consecutive season with at least a dozen scores.

Allen's offensive structure won't change much with former offensive coordinator Joe Brady now the head coach in Buffalo, which means Allen should again rank among the top goal-line rushers in the league. The Bills traded for WR DJ Moore this offseason, giving Allen another functional pass catcher alongside Khalil Shakir and tight end Dalton Kincaid. With Allen's foot fully healed following an offseason procedure, his steady combination of goal-line rushing and strong passing efficiency should yield similar fantasy results to previous years.

Tyler Warren

TE - Round 4, Pick 35 - Bye 13

Warren led all rookie tight ends last season with 817 receiving yards, despite trailing off in the second half of the season in an injury-compromised Colts offense. He commanded a hefty 112 targets to rank third overall among tight ends. Warren only caught four passing touchdowns on a team where RB Jonathan Taylor dominated red-zone work, but the rookie TE did add one rushing score, reprising one of his tricks from a Heisman-contending senior year at Penn State.

In 2026, the Colts offense figures to fall somewhere between its blistering pace from the first half of 2025 and its terrible form in the closing weeks. QB Daniel Jones appears on track to return from an Achilles tear for Week 1, though it isn't a sure thing, and the Colts lost WR Michael Pittman and RT Braden Smith this offseason. Pittman's departure leaves a target-volume void that won't be filled by the WRs and TEs who take over his vacated snaps, opening the door for Warren, Alec Pierce and Josh Downs to take on larger target shares than they handled last year.

Bucky Irving

RB - Round 5, Pick 46 - Bye 10

Regression cut both ways for Irving in his two NFL seasons. His standout 2024 rookie campaign featured highs that were never going to hold, and his rocky 2025 was marred by misfortune that shouldn't repeat, making him a solid bet to bounce back this season. At 5-foot-10, 195, he isn't built for a bell-cow load over the long haul, and unlike other undersized backs in the league, he shows little interest in ducking contact, running with a fearlessness that invites punishment.

Irving averaged 17.3 carries per game last season, echoing his late-2024 rate, but Tampa Bay may be wise to scale him toward 15 carries per game rather than 20. Kenneth Gainwell's free-agent arrival hints at exactly that, as he looms as a threat for both change-of-pace carries and passing-down snaps, even though Irving has been excellent catching the ball (7.7 yards per target on 87 career targets). The doomsday outcome for his fantasy value is Gainwell hogging the targets while Sean Tucker vultures short-yardage scores.

TreVeyon Henderson

RB - Round 6, Pick 55 - Bye 11

Armed with 4.43 speed and polished hands out of the backfield, Henderson surged in the middle of his rookie year and finished with 10 touchdowns on 215 regular-season touches, averaging 5.1 yards per carry behind four scoring bursts of 50-plus yards. The playoffs were a different, less encouraging story, as he managed just 8.8 touches and 27.3 scrimmage yards per game across four games while Rhamondre Stevenson commanded 17.5 touches for 85.8 yards.

Henderson should see the split tilt his way this year to some degree. While a higher ceiling doesn't mitigate his shaky floor in re-draft leagues, Henderson shines in best ball thanks to those spike weeks. Stevenson is clearly trusted by the staff despite an ugly fumbling history, making him a weekly frustration for Henderson managers. Should Stevenson miss time or get benched, though, Henderson's floor would climb toward RB1 territory.

Eagles

DEF - Round 7, Pick 66 - Bye 10

Philadelphia's defense was solidly above average in 2025, but perhaps a disappointment relative to the dominance of 2024. There's no shortage of talent, and the offseason departure of Jaelen Phillips may be partially offset by the addition of fellow edge rusher Jonathan Greenard. In the secondary, the Eagles made a major play by signing former Seattle cornerback Riq Woolen, adding more length opposite young standout Quinyon Mitchell. With Cooper DeJean patrolling the slot, no team has more playmaking ability at cornerback. Defensive coordinator Vic Fangio also has plenty of firepower in the front seven, with speed and versatility that few teams can match. With a favorable early schedule that includes a Week 1 home game against Washington, the Eagles D/ST is a sensible choice on draft day, though perhaps as a second-tier option behind the Rams, Texans, Seahawks, etc.

Jason Myers

K - Round 8, Pick 75 - Bye 11

Myers set a single-season kicker record for fantasy scoring during his busy and highly productive 2025 campaign. The Seahawks had a dominant offense and an explosive offense, but they often stalled out in scoring range, setting up Myers for nearly unprecedented volume. He converted 41 of 48 field-goal attempts during the regular season, finishing with an 85.4 percent success rate that's not far from his career-long mark. He followed that up by knocking down all 19 of his postseason kicks, including a record five field goals in the Super Bowl.

Myers still possesses the requisite leg strength to handle attempts from beyond 60 yards, though he can't quite match the range of a Brandon Aubrey or Cam Little. Even if Myers is more good than great in real-life terms, there's a lot to be said for strong job security on one of the best teams in the league.

Carnell Tate

WR - Round 9, Pick 86 - Bye 9

Tate was the first receiver off the board this spring, going fourth overall to a Titans team overhauling its offense. New head coach Robert Saleh and coordinator Brian Daboll lead the fresh staff, bringing Wan'Dale Robinson, tight end Daniel Bellinger and center Austin Schlottmann over from New York. With only Robinson, 31-year-old Calvin Ridley and a pair of 2025 fourth-rounders competing for snaps, the rookie could quickly command more targets than he ever did at Ohio State. A former five-star recruit, he posted 18-264-1 as a true freshman, 52-733-4 in 2024 and an impressive 51-872-9 across just 11 games last season.

Tate is widely viewed as a high-floor prospect rather than a high-ceiling one, a reputation cemented by his 4.53 40 at the 2026 Combine. Measuring 6-foot-2, 192, he operates more as a savvy technician than a physical specimen, winning through sharp intelligence, crisp route running and highly dependable hands. While similar profiles have certainly yielded high-volume NFL receivers, a productive rookie campaign will require significant strides from quarterback Cam Ward and a Tennessee offensive line looking to rebound from a dreadful 2025.

George Kittle

TE - Round 10, Pick 95 - Bye 8

Kittle is attempting to return for Week 1 following a devastating Achilles tear in January, and while he's been optimistic throughout the process, there's no guarantee he'll be his old self when he gets back on the field. He produced at an elite level prior to the injury last season, ranking third among TEs in PPR points per game (14.5) and fantasy points per route run (0.59). Kittle previously posted top-three finishes for both receiving yards and touchdowns during the 2023 and 2024 campaigns, leaning on league-leading efficiency while averaging around six targets per game.

In other words, Kittle represents a massive potential steal at his current ADP if he can somehow regain his full pre-injury form by, say, mid-season. Kittle is 32 years old, but he's also one of the all-time freak athletes at his position, and he's still playing in a Kyle Shanahan offense that tends to provide great YAC opportunities while generally boosting pass efficiency. The formula has worked for a long time, with disruptions only emerging due to Kittle's inconsistent availability.

Dalton Kincaid

TE - Round 11, Pick 106 - Bye 7

Kincaid displayed progress in 2025 despite playing through a PCL injury for much of the year. He rarely surpassed a 50 percent snap share after the fifth week of the year and managed to suit up for only 12 contests. However, Kincaid was highly efficient when on the field, leading all qualifying players at the position with 14.6 yards per reception. He also managed to find the end zone five times, surpassing his total from his first two seasons combined.

Kincaid opted to forgo surgery for the second straight offseason, which adds a layer of injury risk to his fantasy profile moving forward, though it also means he avoided a lengthy rehab process this offseason. In all likelihood, Kincaid will continue to serve as a medium-volume, high-efficiency target for Josh Allen, who otherwise has WRs DJ Moore and Khalil Shakir as his top receiving options. Kincaid thus profiles as a borderline fantasy starter who will continue splitting snaps with superior blockers like Dawson Knox and Jackson Hawes.

Matthew Stafford

QB - Round 12, Pick 115 - Bye 11

Stafford entered last season with major injury concerns but stayed healthy for the full year, ultimately winning NFL MVP and finishing as the QB3 for fantasy. He led the league with 4,707 passing yards and 46 touchdowns, capitalizing on a high volume of attempts (597) and elite downfield accuracy. Stafford led the league in deep-ball completions and touchdowns, and he was nearly unstoppable in the intermediate range of the field as well. However, his fantasy finish was entirely dependent on high touchdown efficiency, as he provided zero rushing utility.

Stafford is likely looking at regression for such a high TD rate, and entering his age-38 season, he's unlikely to match last year's stats even if he remains highly effective in real life for the Rams. He still has Puka Nacua and Davante Adams providing top-tier targets, and Sean McVay's play-calling remains outstanding, but blockbuster offseason moves may lead to more reliance on the defense and running game to dominate opponents.

Mike Washington Jr.

RB - Round 13, Pick 126 - Bye 13

A 2026 fourth-round pick, Washington enters the NFL as one of the more freakish size-speed individuals the league has seen. At 6-foot-1, 223, Washington incredibly clocked 4.33 40 at the NFL Combine. The trouble is that it's far from clear he offers much else as a running back prospect. His college journey wound through three programs, starting with one year at New Mexico State and three at Buffalo before a final stop at Arkansas in 2025. In those first four years, he averaged just 4.4 yards per carry. His pass-catching was worse still, as he managed only 73 receptions for 470 yards and three scores on 117 targets, a woeful 4.0 yards per target. Factor in 11 fumbles over his last two seasons, and Washington looks like a project needing considerable polish.

Washington, though, has a chance to contribute immediately as a rookie for the Raiders. Facing weak competition this preseason, Washington seemingly locked down the No. 2 RB job. Starter Ashton Jeanty then suffered an ankle injury Aug. 23 during practice, potentially setting up Washington for a starting role in his regular-season debut.

49ers

DEF - Round 14, Pick 135 - Bye 8

San Francisco is in a state of transition as Raheem Morris takes over as the defensive coordinator, bringing his 3-4 experience to a team that has historically excelled in 4-3 alignments. The success of this shift rests on the shoulders of superstars Nick Bosa, Fred Warner, and Dre Greenlaw, all of whom appear capable of making the adjustment-if they can actually manage to stay healthy. Coming off a disappointing 27th-place fantasy finish, the 49ers D/ST is a far cry from where it was a few years ago when the team had other top pass rushers alongside Bosa. While some rebound can be expected, the 49ers are relying on a lot of mediocre or unproven starters alongside their aforementioned standouts. A difficult Week 1 trip to Australia to face the Rams is another reason to avoid the San Francisco D/ST in fantasy drafts this summer.

Makai Lemon

WR - Round 15, Pick 146 - Bye 10

Falling slightly during the draft process, Lemon ultimately landed with the Eagles as the 20th overall selection following an aggressive trade. He'd previously generated buzz as a potential top-10 pick, but concerns about straight-line speed and slot-based college production led to a modest drop. He steps into a good situation to earn immediate playing time, joining a transitioning offense that will feature Sean Mannion taking over playcalling duties from head coach Nick Sirianni. While the Eagles are highly unlikely to rank among the league leaders in pass attempts, Lemon at least has a clear chance to earn a significant target share early on.

Lemon primarily played the slot at USC, and he's listed at 5-foot-11, 194. However, he may have the necessary physicality to handle perimeter snaps, even if he's not a top deep threat. With A.J. Brown gone, the Eagles have DeVonta Smith as their clear No. 1 receiver and Dontayvion Wicks as the other favorite for playing time. Lemon could benefit if the coaching staff deploys Smith on more deep routes, opening up the intermediate and short areas of the field.

MR. G

C+
GRADE

Definitely not a Boomer Drafts Like a Pro... in a Funhouse Mirror!

RECORD

10-4-0

POWER

#3

PROJ PTS

1760.82

SEAT

7

SUMMARY

Definitely not a Boomer came into the draft with a plan, and while it may have resembled a treasure map drawn by a toddler, they still managed to snag a solid C+ grade. Drafting 7th out of 10 teams, they made some head-scratching choices, but hey, who doesn't love a good plot twist? With a projected record of 10-4-0, they're eyeing a cozy playoff spot, but they might want to keep a close watch on those bye weeks-two players are taking a vacation in week 6. Talk about a scheduling faux pas!

Despite a schedule that's tougher than a two-dollar steak, Definitely not a Boomer is projected to finish 2nd in 9 Fantasy Experts & Mr Glenn. Their best pick was a steal at 54, while their worst pick at 47 has them wondering if they accidentally drafted a player from the wrong sport. With a projected total of 1760.82 points, they've got the potential to light up the scoreboard-if they can avoid the pitfalls of their own lineup. Let's just hope Definitely not a Boomer doesn't need a GPS to navigate their way to victory!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Drake Maye

QB - Round 6, Pick 54 - Bye 11

2025 PTS

359.46

2026 PTS

305.19

WORST DRAFT PICK

Luther Burden III

WR - Round 5, Pick 47 - Bye 10

2025 PTS

104.40

2026 PTS

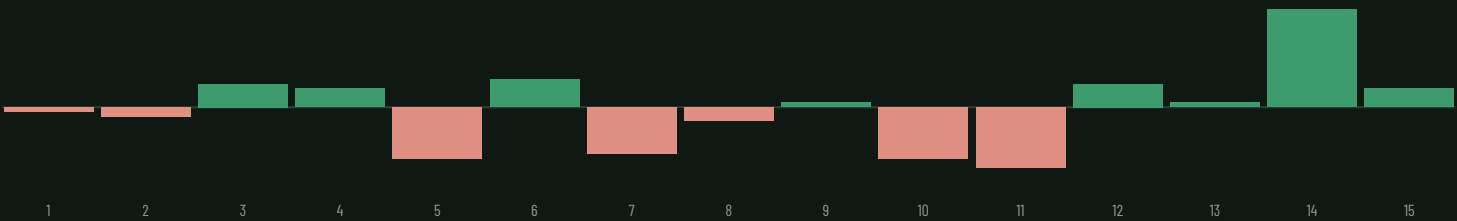

172.37

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK - ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

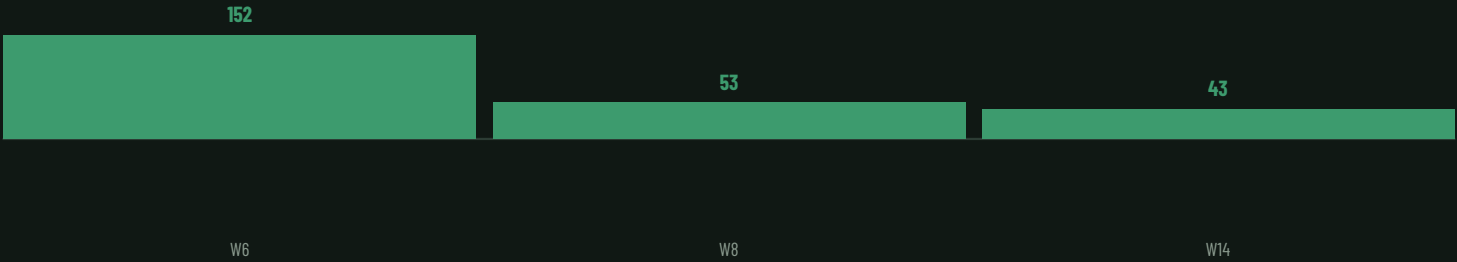

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.07	Amon-Ra St. Brown	WR	7.9	-1	Det
2.04	Chase Brown	RB	15.7	-2	Cin
3.07	Nico Collins	WR	21.5	+5	Hou
4.04	Jeremiyah Love	RB	29.8	+4	Ari
5.07	Luther Burden III WORST	WR	57.8	-11	Chi
6.04	Drake Maye BEST	QB	47.8	+6	NE
7.07	Rhamondre Stevenson	RB	76.9	-10	NE
8.04	Parker Washington	WR	77.0	-3	Jax
9.07	DK Metcalf	WR	85.6	+1	Pit
10.04	Dallas Goedert	TE	105.1	-11	Phi
11.07	Kenny Gainwell	RB	120.1	-13	TB
12.04	Seahawks	DST	108.9	+5	Sea
13.07	Matthew Golden	WR	125.6	+1	GB
14.04	Kyler Murray	QB	112.8	+21	Min
15.07	Eddy Pineiro	K	142.6	+4	SF

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

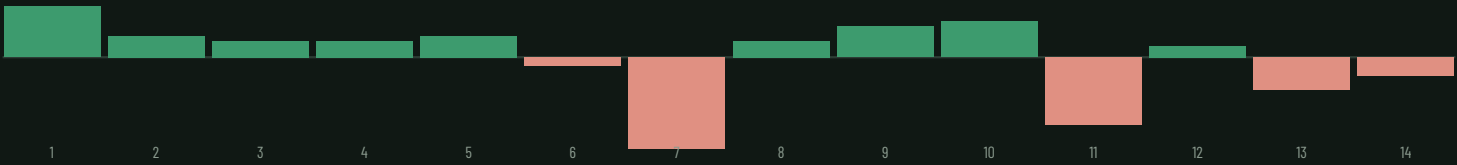

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (100 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
110	104	103	103	104	98	81	103	106	107	86	102	93	96

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Amon-Ra St. Brown

WR - Round 1, Pick 7 - Bye 6

St. Brown delivered outstanding value for fantasy managers in 2025 even though the Detroit offense took a step back after losing former offensive coordinator Ben Johnson to the division-rival Bears. Long a reliable target earner, St. Brown set a career high with 172 looks last year and scored double-digit touchdowns for a third straight season. He dominated the middle of the field again, trailing only Wan'Dale Robinson in total slot yardage. From a volume standpoint, it helped that the Lions struggled, often chasing deficits in matchups where they'd established safe leads the year before.

The team presumably hopes for better balance in 2026, and a favorable schedule should help, setting up QB Jared Goff for another efficient season. Goff still possesses a dangerous supporting cast, featuring Jameson Williams, Jahmyr Gibbs and Sam LaPorta in addition to St. Brown, though the offensive line isn't quite what it was in 2023-24. Minor schematic shifts shouldn't matter too much for fantasy given St. Brown's consistent track record of elite volume and strong efficiency.

Chase Brown

RB - Round 2, Pick 14 - Bye 6

Brown's 2025 opened like a nightmare and closed like a dream, and by season's end the ugly beginning had been all but forgotten. Remarkably, his year-end totals ended up mirroring his 2024 line, lifted by a late explosion of eight touchdowns and 28 catches in the final six games, a surge that coincided with Joe Burrow's return from a toe injury. The optimistic case for 2026 is a more evenly distributed campaign, one that preserves those peaks while smoothing out the valleys, or at least spacing them more mercifully.

Brown is in a good situation. Cincinnati declined to add any noteworthy backfield help this offseason, and returning backup Samaje Perine ranks among the least threatening veteran reserves in the league. So even if Brown concedes a handful of carries here and there, his steady diet of receptions and goal-line opportunities within a prolific passing attack gives him a clear, well-defined route to RB1 production. He profiles as a strong bet to reward his drafters again.

Nico Collins

WR - Round 3, Pick 27 - Bye 8

A pair of concussions interrupted an otherwise stellar 2025 campaign for Collins after he successfully avoided the lower-body injuries that previously troubled him. He managed to finish with 15.1 PPR points and 74.5 receiving yards per game. He graded out as a low-end WR1 or high-end WR2 for fantasy purposes, though his per-game and per-route metrics fell slightly below his elite 2023 and 2024 levels. He experienced nearly identical usage on the surface, but his catch rate dropped to 59.2 percent. He suffered from an abundance of uncatchable targets and committed just one dropped pass all year.

Collins has a three-year streak of 1,000-yard seasons that includes 25 touchdowns across 42 regular-season games. He endured a tough environment last season as C.J. Stroud failed to replicate his promising rookie year and the front office botched its offensive line management. Collins will play alongside new additions David Montgomery, Braden Smith, and Wyatt Teller this offseason, with the Texans beefing up their offense for more power runs and play-action passes. Doubts persist about the overall offense, but Collins should have dominant usage shares, especially after No. 2 receiver Jayden Higgins suffered an ACL tear this summer.

Jeremiyah Love

RB - Round 4, Pick 34 - Bye 14

Few backs in his ADP range carry as wide a spread of possible outcomes as Love, and that's precisely because the third overall pick pairs elite talent with the familiar traps that snare rookie fantasy runners. The biggest is usage, as Love is recovering from a preseason ankle injury and has Tyler Allgeier on hand to ease the rushing burden. Love's build feeds that concern too, since at 6-feet, 212, he lacks an ideal strong base and may never be a 300-carry hammer anyway. Notre Dame reinforced the point, capping him at 199 and 163 carries the last two years while Jadarian Price ate into the workload off the bench. Given his high center of gravity, the Cardinals could reasonably shield him from the nastiest short-yardage reps, where Allgeier might prove just as effective.

Love could trend nearer to 15 touches per game than 20, even if he quickly puts the high-ankle sprain behind him and is ready to play in September. With 4.36 speed and rare burst, he has upside for impressive per-play efficiency despite the general concerns about Arizona's offense with Jacoby Brissett under center.

Luther Burden III

WR - Round 5, Pick 47 - Bye 10

A 2025 second-round pick, Burden spent the early portion of his rookie year buried on the depth chart as Chicago's No. 4 wide receiver. He finally broke out in Week 10, sparking a run of 10 consecutive appearances with at least three catches (including the playoffs). While his route shares typically remained modest as the No. 3 receiver, he excelled from an efficiency standpoint, finishing third among all qualified wide receivers with 2.91 yards per route run.

Burden commanded looks at an elite clip when he was on the field, with a target rate that placed inside the top 15 league-wide. At 6-foot, 210, with 4.42 speed, Burden has the sturdy frame and YAC skills to become a high-volume receiver once he refines his skillset and playbook knowledge. The opportunity certainly should be there this year, after the Bears let WRs DJ Moore and Olamide Zaccheaus leave in free agency. Burden, Rome Odunze and Colston Loveland are all in a good position to claim large target shares, but a groin injury disrupted Burden's momentum this summer and put his Week 1 availability into question. Once healthy, he's sure to be a key part of Chicago's passing game.

Drake Maye

QB - Round 6, Pick 54 - Bye 11

Maye's second-year breakout was one of the top storylines of 2025, as he nearly won the MVP award and led New England to the Super Bowl. He led the league with a 72.0 completion percentage while maintaining an aggressive 9.1-yard average target depth—a rare statistical profile that helped him throw 31 touchdowns and lead the NFL in YPA. Beyond his passing, Maye led all qualified QBs in scramble rate (10.2 percent) and scrambles (62), with the off-script plays accounting for 429 of his 450 rushing yards.

Maye could have a hard time matching last year's efficiency, but the trade for A.J. Brown gives New England a true No. 1 wide receiver, with Romeo Doubs a capable No. 2. Even against a tougher schedule, Maye's combination of frequent scrambling and accurate deep passing should play well in fantasy. He has the right skillset to maintain a top-five fantasy ranking even if there's a dip in efficiency as defenses adjust to his game after last year's blistering 8.9 YPA. Maye could also add some passing volume if the Patriots' defense takes a step back from last year, offering another avenue to offset some of the likely YPA regression.

Rhamondre Stevenson

RB - Round 7, Pick 67 - Bye 11

Fumbling has dogged Stevenson throughout his career and nearly got him benched last season after he put the ball on the ground twice in Week 3 and again in Week 5. His 17 fumbles are tied for most since he entered the league in 2021 while his nine fumbles lost rank second. To his credit, he cleaned it up, not fumbling once more the rest of 2025, seizing command of New England's backfield in the postseason.

Stevenson returns this season as the incumbent starter, though the talented TreVeyon Henderson's won't sit behind him forever. There's a secondary worry, too. Despite his 227-pound build and physical style, Stevenson has missed time with foot or ankle injuries in each of the last three years. A run-heavy scheme could theoretically let both backs function as fantasy starters, but that path looks narrow. The likelier result is a split that leaves at least one of them marginalized.

Parker Washington

WR - Round 8, Pick 74 - Bye 7

Washington opened last season as the No. 4 wide receiver in Jacksonville, behind Brian Thomas, Travis Hunter and Dyami Brown. After a slow start to the year, Washington steadily climbed the hierarchy before catching fire over the final month of the season. He emerged as a reliable asset from Week 7 to Week 15, averaging 3.7 catches for 49.3 yards on 5.9 targets. He then concluded the year with four consecutive performances (including playoffs) of at least nine targets, six receptions and 87 receiving yards.

Washington lacks elite speed and physically profiles as a standard slot specialist at 5-foot-10. He surprisingly did his best work on the outside last year, generating 31 catches for 497 yards and two scores on 192 perimeter routes. Washington enters the upcoming season in a highly egalitarian wide receiver room that lacks a clear alpha option. He could push for massive fantasy numbers if he re-establishes himself as the preferred target for Trevor Lawrence, but any slip in performance could leave Thomas and Jakobi Meyers with more of the burden.

DK Metcalf

WR - Round 9, Pick 87 - Bye 9

Metcalf responded to change of scenery last year by recording a career-worst 850 receiving yards. He managed to secure a few timely downfield strikes that helped his team immensely, but his target volume was disappointing in an offense that threw a huge number of passes near the line of scrimmage. Metcalf was the clear No. 1 option, yet just a 21.5 percent target share while watching Aaron Rodgers pepper his RBs and TEs.

Metcalf now prepares for a massive schematic shift under new Steelers head coach Mike McCarthy, who is expected to call plays. Both McCarthy and Rodgers have lengthy track records in pass-first offenses, but that might not matter for Metcalf if Rodgers simply can't push the ball downfield with any velocity at this stage of his career. The Steelers added WRs Michael Pittman and Germie Bernard this offseason, so they'll be much better suited to 11 personnel than they were last season with a rotating cast of backups alongside Metcalf at wide receiver.

Dallas Goedert

TE - Round 10, Pick 94 - Bye 10

Goedert secured a career-high 11 scores on just 60 total receptions in 2025, drastically reversing a long-running trend where his yardage and catch totals were more impressive than his TD totals. He also posted a career-low 9.9 yards per catch last year, dropping to 39.4 receiving yards per game, with the TD binge being the only real positive. Goedert had never surpassed five touchdowns in any season prior to last year, making his 2025 output all the more unlikely (and unrepeatable).

Goedert re-signed this offseason on a one-year contract before the Eagles spent a second-round pick on potential replacement Eli Stowers. It's certainly possible that Goedert continues in his three-down role this season, but he'll also have solid target competition even with A.J. Brown gone, as the Eagles added Stowers, Makai Lemon (first-round pick) and Dontayvion Wicks to give their passing game more depth. Goedert's ADP is low enough that he can outproduce it if he holds down his three-down role, but there's no real ceiling to dream of at this point in his career.

Kenny Gainwell

RB - Round 11, Pick 107 - Bye 10

The light finally came on for Gainwell in year five, as a one-year stint in Pittsburgh produced a career-high 1,023 scrimmage yards on 514 snaps last season. What powered that line was a receiving explosion, with 73 catches on 85 targets, a workload that nearly equaled his combined target count from the previous three seasons (88). His pass-catching pedigree was never in doubt, dating to his high-volume days at Memphis, but something about that Steelers offense unleashed it.

Gainwell's breakout earned him a two-year, $14 million deal with Tampa Bay, where he figures to slot in as the receiving complement behind Bucky Irving in the backfield. A dose of skepticism is warranted, though. Much of that target spike owed to a declining Aaron Rodgers treating the ball like a hot potato and firing quick throws to the flats, a style Baker Mayfield simply doesn't share. Designed touches could juice Gainwell's per-snap rate, and a fairly even timeshare with Irving is plausible, but Sean Tucker lurking near the goal line only crowds the picture.

Seahawks

DEF - Round 12, Pick 114 - Bye 11

Seattle's defense seemingly enters the new campaign in good shape despite losing CB Riq Woolen, S Coby Bryant and EDGE Boye Mafe this offseason. No defense had better depth to begin with, so the Seahawks may have experienced starters at every position even after the aforementioned departures. Mike Macdonald's intricate 3-4 scheme is the other selling point, in any case, with defensive coordinator Aden Durde also back for another year. Cornerback Devon Witherspoon and defensive lineman Leonard Williams are probably the two biggest names on the Seattle defense, but there's no shortage of second-tier talent alongside them, and Macdonald may be the best defensive playcaller in the league. While some aspects of 2025's magic are unlikely to repeat, e.g., four special-teams touchdowns, the Seahawks still project to have one of the strongest defenses (and teams) in the NFL.

Matthew Golden

WR - Round 13, Pick 127 - Bye 11

Green Bay spent premium first-round capital on Golden last spring, but his rookie year amounted to a heavily regulated, part-time role that yielded just 29 catches for 361 yards across 14 regular-season contests. He rarely looked out of place when given an opportunity, but a nagging string of minor injuries combined with intense weekly snap competition consistently funneled him to the sidelines. The narrative changes entirely heading into 2026, as the front office cleared out the logjam ahead of him by parting ways with both Romeo Doubs and Dontayvion Wicks in the offseason.

Golden currently operates under the radar compared to teammates Christian Watson and Jayden Reed, who are drawing the vast majority of late-summer breakout hype. However, his blazing 4.29 speed from the 2025 Combine gives him a highly unique vertical dimension, and he boasts excellent physical composition for a burner at 5-foot-11, 191 pounds. If fantasy managers are aggressively betting on Watson's efficiency scaling up, they should also be intrigued by his 22-year-old teammate who has a golden opportunity to erupt.

Kyler Murray

QB - Round 14, Pick 134 - Bye 6

Murray has struggled to stay on the field, to say the least, missing 12 games in 2025 and failing to play a full season in four of his last five years. When healthy, he has largely relied on short passes and scrambles, mostly with mediocre results. In Minnesota, they'll settle for mediocre after watching what J.J. McCarthy did to Kevin O'Connell's well-oiled machine last year. The move to Minnesota also means Murray will have his best supporting cast yet, highlighted by Justin Jefferson, Jordan Addison and T.J. Hockenson -- all within a proven offensive scheme.

Murray may be asked to throw downfield more than he ever has before, but the Vikings will also give him better weapons with which to do it. The fantasy results will impress if he proves up to the task as a downfield passer without sacrificing too much of the rushing production from past years.

Eddy Pineiro

K - Round 15, Pick 147 - Bye 8

Pineiro delivered an exceptionally accurate campaign last year by leading all qualified kickers with a 96.6 percent field-goal conversion rate. He parlayed that efficiency into a seventh-place fantasy finish among kickers, marking his first fantasy-relevant campaign after years of bouncing around the league. Pineiro benefited immensely from his transition to San Francisco, where Kyle Shanahan's efficient offense helped to provide plenty of kicking volume.

Pineiro also went 6-for-7 on field-goal attempts from 50-plus yards, raising his career long-distance mark to 17-of-21. While Pineiro doesn't have one of the league's stronger legs, he's proven accurate on the medium-long kicks under 60 yards. He's a solid-enough fantasy option for anyone that waits until the final few picks of their draft to take a kicker.

MATT

C+

GRADE

There is no 2nd best Drafts Like a Pro, Finishes Like a Champ!

RECORD

11-3-0

POWER

#4

PROJ PTS

1753.44

SEAT

8

SUMMARY

There is no 2nd best may have snagged a C+ on their draft report card, but don't let that fool you! With a projected record of 11-3-0, this team is ready to strut their stuff in 9 Fantasy Experts & Mr Glenn. Drafting from the 8th spot, they managed to grab some solid talent, including a sneaky good pick that was way better than expected. Just wait until the competition sees what Jayden Daniels can do - they'll be wishing they had made that move themselves!

Despite the draft grade, There is no 2nd best is projected to finish in 1st place, proving that sometimes, it's not about how you start, but how you finish. With only one player on bye week 8, they're looking at a schedule that's tougher than a two-dollar steak, but hey, they thrive under pressure! As the season unfolds, let's see if There is no 2nd best can turn that C+ into an A+ by the end of the playoffs. If anyone can do it, it's There is no 2nd best!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Jayden Daniels

QB - Round 7, Pick 68 - Bye 7

2025 PTS

117.28

2026 PTS

302.91

WORST DRAFT PICK

Chuba Hubbard

RB - Round 9, Pick 88 - Bye 5

2025 PTS

110.40

2026 PTS

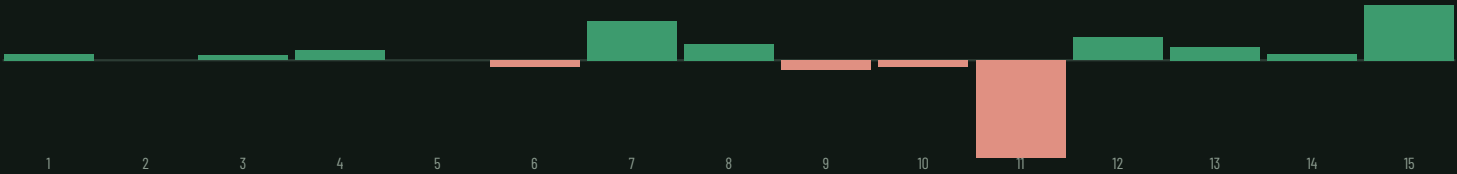

139.99

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK – ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.08	Christian McCaffrey	RB	5.9	+2	SF
2.03	Justin Jefferson	WR	13.3	+0	Min
3.08	Trey McBride	TE	27.3	+1	Ari
4.03	DeVonta Smith	WR	29.5	+3	Phi
5.08	Garrett Wilson	WR	47.7	+0	NYJ
6.03	Quinshon Judkins	RB	54.6	-2	Cle
7.08	Jayden Daniels BEST	QB	55.5	+12	Was
8.03	Christian Watson	WR	67.7	+5	GB
9.08	Chuba Hubbard WORST	RB	90.6	-3	Car
10.03	Chris Godwin Jr.	WR	95.3	-2	TB
11.08	Ravens	DST	138.4	-30	Bal
12.03	Josh Downs	WR	106.0	+7	Ind
13.08	Cameron Dicker	K	123.9	+4	LAC
14.03	Wan'Dale Robinson	WR	130.8	+2	Ten
15.08	Chris Rodriguez Jr.	RB	130.6	+17	Jax

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

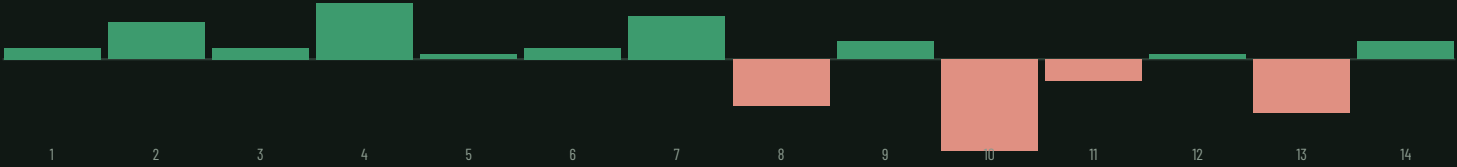

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (100 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
102	106	102	109	101	102	107	93	103	86	97	101	92	103

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Christian McCaffrey

RB - Round 1, Pick 8 - Bye 8

Clouds hung over McCaffrey to open 2025, as an unspecified Achilles tendon issue had his fantasy investors bracing for the worst. Instead, he shrugged it off and dodged those fears entirely. Not only did he start all season for San Francisco, he was almost certainly overworked, as the 49ers leaned on him to plug production holes created by injuries elsewhere in the skill-position group. The result was a full 17-game slate and 927 snaps, his heaviest count since 2019 and the third most of his career.

McCaffrey, now 30 and with a lengthy injury history trailing him, is a logical candidate for the 49ers to protect after last year's career highs of 311 carries and 102 catches. Whether they can afford that luxury is the real question. Second-year fifth-rounder Jordan James shows some promise, and third-round rookie Kaelon Black brings more juice between the tackles, but neither has proven he can start, and even fourth-year man Isaac Guerendo's roster spot is uncertain. Absent a clear alternative, don't be shocked if San Francisco rides McCaffrey hard again, much to his managers' delight.

Justin Jefferson

WR - Round 2, Pick 13 - Bye 6

Sinking to the lowest output of his career, Jefferson struggled to overcome catastrophic quarterback play in 2025, his sixth NFL season. He barely crossed the 1,000-yard threshold on 144 targets and managed a dismal two touchdowns. Minnesota's offensive collapse completely erased talented teammates T.J. Hockenson and Jordan Addison from the fantasy radar and left Jefferson as a mere WR3. Just one year prior, in 2022, Jefferson produced a 1,533-yard, 10-touchdown season while catching passes from Sam Darnold.

Jefferson enters 2026 with an entirely new outlook following the acquisition of Kyler Murray. The Vikings expect the veteran quarterback to salvage the offense and revive his own career simultaneously. Murray previously elevated DeAndre Hopkins in Arizona, though that system relied heavily on quick hitters rather than the intermediate and deep routes favored by O'Connell. Moving on from a league-worst quarterback situation guarantees a drastic improvement, though questions remain whether this new signal caller perfectly aligns with his vertical skillset.

Trey McBride

TE - Round 3, Pick 28 - Bye 14

McBride went unchallenged as the top fantasy tight end last year, outscoring all the others by more than 100 PPR points. He hauled in 126 receptions for 1,239 yards and 11 scores on 169 targets to lead the position across all major statistical categories -- a feat otherwise accomplished by only Travis Kelce, Mark Andrews and Jimmy Graham over the past 20 years.

McBride saw a monumental surge in his touchdown production once Jacoby Brissett took over as the starting quarterback in Week 6. He had long struggled to find the end zone on a regular basis while playing with Kyler Murray, but the quarterback switch resulted in 10 scores for McBride over the back half of the year. For the upcoming season, McBride will have more competition for touches and targets in a new-look Arizona offense, with WR Marvin Harrison coming back healthy and RB Jeremiyah Love providing a receiving threat out of the backfield. McBride should still be one of the first two TEs taken in fantasy drafts this summer, but he's unlikely to match last year's target volume even if the Cardinals struggle again and play from behind on a regular basis.

DeVonta Smith

WR - Round 4, Pick 33 - Bye 10

The offseason departure of A.J. Brown gives Smith a chance to move up a tier or two in the fantasy ranks. He must navigate a completely retooled depth chart, however, after the franchise drafted Makai Lemon in the first round to replace Brown. The Eagles also acquired veteran wide receivers Dontayvion Wicks and Hollywood Brown, while second-round pick Eli Stowers adds depth at tight end. With RB Saquon Barkley and TE Dallas Goedert still around, Philadelphia's offense could be a bit more spread-the-wealth, relative to the past few years.

Smith was originally drafted in 2021 when the Eagles traded up for him with the expectation that he would be their top receiver for a decade. He hasn't disappointed, making significant contributions to several excellent teams, though largely as the secondary option behind Brown. New offensive coordinator Sean Mannion is sure to feature Smith prominently in the new scheme, but there are some questions about Jalen Hurts' ability to adjust and support reasonable team-level receiving production.

Garrett Wilson

WR - Round 5, Pick 48 - Bye 13

Prior to a devastating October injury last year, Wilson was essentially on track to replicate his statistical output from previous seasons. He averaged 6.0 catches for 65.8 yards on 9.3 targets per game before spraining and hyperextending his knee. Wilson once again combined massive volume with subpar efficiency while attempting to carry an offense where RB Breece Hall was the only other real weapon. Wilson attempted a brief return in Week 10, but he lasted only 19 snaps before shutting it down for the remainder of the year.

Wilson could benefit from an overhauled offense after the Jets showed progress along the offensive line last year. He will play under new offensive coordinator Frank Reich and catch passes from Geno Smith. Wilson also faces increased target competition after the Jets' front office drafted TE Kenyon Sadiq 16th overall and WR Omar Cooper at pick No. 30. Wilson still figures to be the far-and-away No. 1 receiver, but it might be the usual story with subpar efficiency in a struggling offense.

Quinshon Judkins

RB - Round 6, Pick 53 - Bye 11

Judkins should be a solid fantasy option even amid whatever else does or doesn't go right for Cleveland in Todd Monken's first year running the show. That's provided, however, he returns healthy from the season-ending dislocated right ankle suffered in Week 16 last season and cut short a promising season. The Browns' offensive dysfunction weighed on him as the year dragged on, yet he consistently outperformed a box score that wasn't even bad to begin with. Seven touchdowns and a 3.6 rushing average in 14 games are perfectly acceptable given how badly a wave of offensive line injuries hamstrung the unit.

Judkins' talent as a runner is unquestioned, and he's flashed enough pass-catching upside to intrigue. The blocking should improve in 2026 following an aggressive overhaul, though the quarterback picture remains murky with Deshaun Watson and Shedeur Sanders atop the depth chart, and running back Dylan Sampson looks like the front-runner for passing-down snaps. Tempering expectations is wise, as returning from major surgery to a perennial rebuild doesn't guarantee a smooth ride back to fantasy relevance.

Jayden Daniels

QB - Round 7, Pick 68 - Bye 7

Daniels' second campaign was a roller-coaster, as a series of injuries (wrist, knee, hamstring, and elbow) ultimately sent him to IR in December. Despite the injuries, his efficiency in the few full games he played was enough to keep him relevant, as he exceeded 16 fantasy points in every appearance where he managed 40-plus snaps. Even if the Commanders look to protect him by reducing his designed runs, Daniels could lead the league in scrambles.

Daniels' biggest concern might be the adjustment to a new scheme, after the Commanders upgraded his supporting cast with the additions of WR Stefon Diggs, TE Chig Okonkwo and RB Rachaad White. It's not a dominant group by any means, but there's enough to get the job done if No. 1 WR Terry McLaurin rebounds from an injury-plagued 2025. Daniels carries inherent injury risk due to his slender frame and aggressive scrambling, but he also offers a mix of speed and passing accuracy that's surpassed by only Lamar Jackson's, with upside to eventually lead all QBs in rushing yardage while throwing for 25-plus touchdowns.

Christian Watson

WR - Round 8, Pick 73 - Bye 11

Watson boasts excellent per-route and per-target efficiency, leaning on the impressive 6-foot-4, 208 frame and 4.36 speed that made him a 2022 second-round selection. Still, he has frustrated fantasy managers by missing roughly five games a year and seeing limited action even when active; he's never exceeded 555 snaps or 66 targets in a season. After returning from an ACL tear to make his debut in Week 7 last year, Watson quickly became Green Bay's top weapon with tight end Tucker Kraft sidelined by his own ACL injury. Watson averaged personal bests of 3.5 receptions and 61.1 yards over 10 regular-season games, even eclipsing a 70 percent snap share in five consecutive weeks at one point.

Watson saw his late-season momentum stalled by a December concussion, but he rebounded to play 57 snaps and score a touchdown during the playoff loss to Chicago. The Packers cleared the runway this offseason by parting ways with Romeo Doubs and Dontayvion Wicks, setting the stage for a potential breakout alongside Matthew Golden and Jayden Reed. Early draft trends firmly position him as the favorite to lead that trio. Fantasy managers are eagerly betting that his outstanding efficiency will finally scale up to a high-volume role in 2026.

Chuba Hubbard

RB - Round 9, Pick 88 - Bye 5

Hubbard's 2025 unraveled the moment a Week 4 calf injury struck, and his eagerness to return made it worse, as he rushed back before the calf had truly healed and predictably wasn't himself. In that diminished state his production dipped, and a healthy Rico Dowdle looked like the better option until Hubbard was finally right. The timing fed a narrative, too: Dowdle inherited a surge of work exactly as Carolina's schedule softened from New England in Week 4 to gifts against Dallas and Miami in Weeks 5 and 6.

Hubbard likely would have posted similar gaudy numbers in those spots had he been healthy, but instead the Dowdle panic probably nudged him back onto the field too soon, dragging out the calf issue until he resembled his old self around Week 13, by which point Dowdle had naturally faded. Dowdle is now in Pittsburgh, which removes the immediate threat, yet Hubbard still carries risk, largely because he's a fine starter without clear separation from other capable backs. Jonathon Brooks could reprise that role if his surgically repaired knee finally cooperates, and Hubbard's rushing-dependent profile leaves little fantasy fallback.

Chris Godwin Jr.

WR - Round 10, Pick 93 - Bye 10

Godwin signed a three-year, $66 million contract with the Buccaneers last offseason despite rehabbing a gruesome leg and ankle injury. The significant risk yielded mixed results, as he didn't debut until Week 4 and later missed Weeks 6-11, finishing his nine appearances with a modest 33-360-2 receiving line on 51 targets. Tampa Bay's offense was largely abysmal in the second half of the year, though he did flash his previous form with 108 yards and a touchdown during a Week 17 loss at Miami.

Godwin is highly unlikely to replicate his blistering pre-injury 2024 pace (50-576-5 in seven games) now that he is 30 years old with just one guaranteed season left on his deal. However, he has a clear opportunity to regain solid fantasy value following Mike Evans' departure. He is set to lead the receiving corps alongside Emeka Egbuka and Jalen McMillan under new offensive coordinator Zac Robinson.

Ravens

DEF - Round 11, Pick 108 - Bye 13

A new era begins for the Ravens' defense with head coach Jesse Minter taking the reins, aiming to overhaul a unit that finished in the bottom half of the league for a lot of key metrics in John Harbaugh's final season. Minter, who built a reputation for excellent defensive playcalling under the other Harbaugh in Los Angeles, is now tasked with getting more out of an aging roster. The pass rush remains a high-risk proposition, as it relies heavily on the health of Trey Hendrickson and Nnamdi Madubuike, who were limited to fewer than 300 combined snaps last year. While the front office secured Anthony Weaver as the new defensive coordinator, the success of this 3-4 scheme hinges entirely on whether veterans like Hendrickson, Madubuike and CB Marlon Humphrey can remain on the field and avoid the age cliff. All in all, Baltimore remains a draftable unit, but the reliance on players past their prime makes them a secondary target for fantasy rather than an every-week starter.

Josh Downs

WR - Round 12, Pick 113 - Bye 13

Downs finished the 2025 season with career lows across a wide variety of efficiency metrics, frequently operating as an afterthought in an offense heavily funneled through Jonathan Taylor, Tyler Warren, Alec Pierce and Michael Pittman. Head coach Shane Steichen explicitly mentioned in April that he wants the 5-foot-9 receiver to log more perimeter snaps during the offseason program, and the August signing of Keenan Allen provides serious competition for slot snaps.

Downs still has a shot at a significant spike in both his route share and per-route target rate, especially if Pierce struggles to regain his top form after ankle surgery in the spring. Quarterback Daniel Jones is working his way back from a severe Achilles tear, which introduces undeniable baseline risk to the passing attack as a whole. However, entering the final year of his rookie contract, Downs finds himself securely back on the breakout radar.

Cameron Dicker

K - Round 13, Pick 128 - Bye 7

Dicker remained efficient and effective last year, averaging 9.3 fantasy points per contest. He saw a slight dip in productivity compared to his stellar 2024 campaign, but his floor nonetheless remains remarkably secure. His career-low 92.7 percent field-goal rate in 2025 was still better than nearly every other qualified kicker in the league.

Dicker is back with the Chargers for 2026 and should remain a popular fantasy option. Others offer more potential for long-distance kicks, but Dicker is one of the safest bets for strong volume and strong accuracy inside of 60 yards. He could be especially busy this season-though perhaps on PATs more so than FGs-if some of the most aggressive predictions about Mike McDaniel's offense come to fruition in Los Angeles.

Wan'Dale Robinson

WR - Round 14, Pick 133 - Bye 9

Securing his financial future with a massive four-year, $70 million contract this past March, the shifty playmaker reunited with former Giants head coach Brian Daboll, who now effectively operates as Tennessee's offensive coordinator. Any lingering fantasy optimism that he might completely replicate his heavily inflated New York volume-where he dominated with 140 targets in back-to-back seasons-was immediately crushed when the Titans selected Ohio State standout Carnell Tate fourth overall. The depth chart is suddenly extremely crowded, featuring a recovering Calvin Ridley alongside Chimere Dike and Elic Ayomanor, a frustrating logjam that threatens to heavily restrict him to a highly specialized slot role.

Robinson actively proved his doubters wrong regarding his pure versatility last season, functioning effectively on the outside by running 159 perimeter routes and ranking an impressive 18th among all wide receivers with 2.26 yards per route run. While he isn't exactly built to command consistent snaps in heavy, multi-tight-end formations, his proven ability to heavily succeed across multiple alignments gives Daboll a fantastic chess piece. He shapes up as a highly dependable, PPR-leaning flex option whose absolute ceiling depends entirely on how creatively the coaching staff deploys him within a completely revamped passing attack.

Chris Rodriguez Jr.

RB - Round 15, Pick 148 - Bye 7

Rodriguez signed a two-year deal with the Jaguars this offseason, looking to fill snaps vacated by Travis Etienne, who moved on to New Orleans. Rodriguez is a bruising runner who wears down defenses. Power is his calling card, yet he pairs it with enough vision, tempo and speed to slice through the secondary, a skill set that fueled 3,644 yards and 32 touchdowns on 592 carries (6.2 per clip) at Kentucky in 2021, his best college season that came when Jaguars head coach Liam Coen was the Wildcats' offensive coordinator.

Rodriguez can handle blitz pickup fine but isn't much of a receiver. As the power complement to speedy Bhayshul Tuten, he profiles as flex-caliber rather than a true starter, especially with Trevor Lawrence vulturing goal-line work. Rodriguez injured his foot in OTAs this

JERGER

D-

GRADE

#1 Y! Fan Drafts Like a Pro... at a Different Sport!

RECORD

4-10-0

POWER

#7

PROJ PTS

1712.45

SEAT

9

SUMMARY

Well, well, well, if it isn't #1 Y! Fan, who managed to snag the coveted 9th pick in the draft and still somehow left the room with a D-grade. It seems the strategy of picking players based on their favorite color didn't quite pay off, as they're projected to finish 7th in 9 Fantasy Experts & Mr Glenn. With a record of 4-10-0 looming on the horizon, it looks like the playoffs might be a distant dream for this squad. But hey, at least they'll have a front-row seat to watch the action unfold from the comfort of their couch!

Despite the rocky draft, #1 Y! Fan did manage to make one savvy move, landing their best pick at 89 when the ADP was 70. Unfortunately, that's where the good news ends, as they also pulled the trigger on a head-scratching choice at 69, where the ADP was a whopping 95. With the 3rd toughest schedule in the league, it looks like they'll need more than just a sprinkle of luck to turn things around. But don't worry, #1 Y! Fan, there's always next year... or the year after that!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Justin Herbert

QB - Round 9, Pick 89 - Bye 7

2025 PTS

299.88

2026 PTS

272.38

WORST DRAFT PICK

J.K. Dobbins

RB - Round 7, Pick 69 - Bye 10

2025 PTS

110.40

2026 PTS

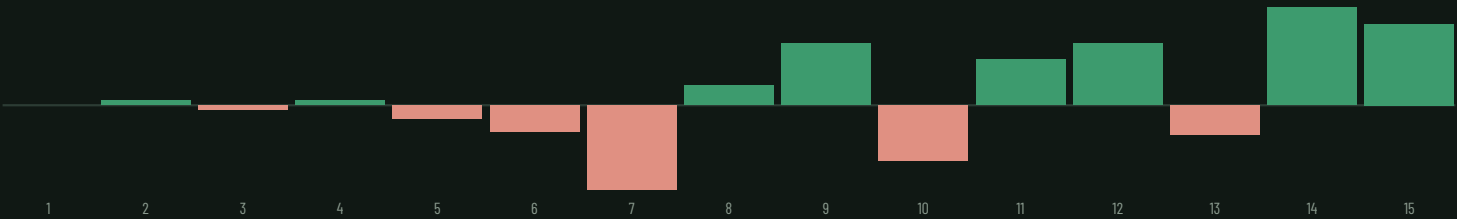

130.32

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK – ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

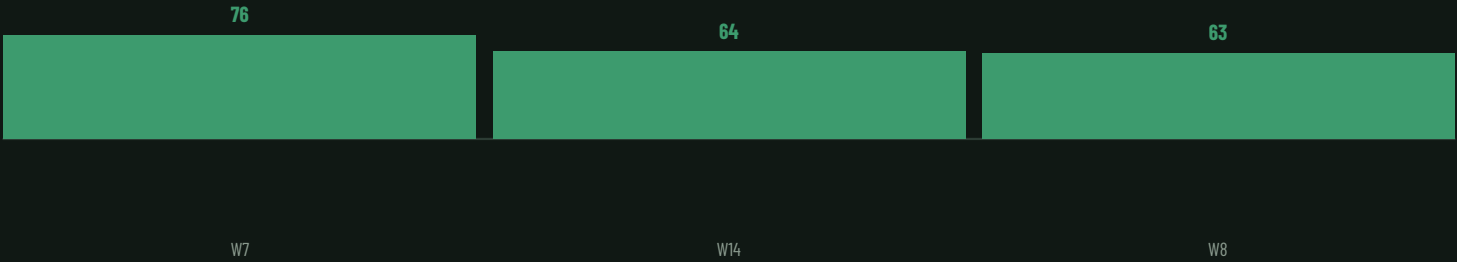

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.09	James Cook III	RB	9.4	+0	Buf
2.02	CeeDee Lamb	WR	11.1	+1	Dal
3.09	Malik Nabers	WR	30.3	-1	NYG
4.02	Chris Olave	WR	31.1	+1	NO
5.09	David Montgomery	RB	53.1	-4	Hou
6.02	Tucker Kraft	TE	60.3	-8	GB
7.09	J.K. Dobbins WORST	RB	94.6	-26	Den
8.02	Jameson Williams	WR	65.5	+6	Det
9.09	Justin Herbert BEST	QB	70.3	+19	LAC
10.02	RJ Harvey	RB	109.2	-17	Den
11.09	Travis Kelce	TE	94.9	+14	KC
12.02	Jaxson Dart	QB	92.7	+19	NYG
13.09	Jaguars	DST	137.8	-9	Jax
14.02	Jordyn Tyson	WR	101.7	+30	NO
15.09	Rachaad White	RB	124.3	+25	Was

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

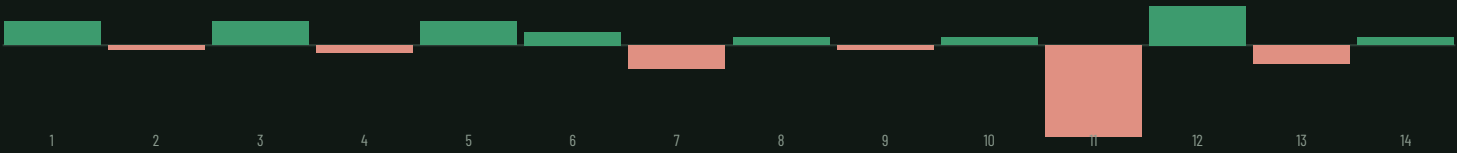

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (102 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
107	102	107	101	107	105	98	104	102	104	85	110	99	104

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

James Cook III

RB - Round 1, Pick 9 - Bye 7

Cook was a draft-day value for the second year in a row last season, and though his price tag has never been higher entering 2026, there's no compelling reason to expect a drop-off soon. Coordinator-turned-head-coach Joe Brady perfected the formula in 2025, marrying Cook to Josh Allen and Buffalo's elite offensive line for tremendous results. He averaged 5.2 yards per carry on 309 attempts, a staggering 102 more than his prior career high. That surge in volume is the lone flicker of long-term worry, particularly given how slight he is at 5-foot-11, 190.

Cook absorbs relatively few direct hits and enjoys unprecedented cover thanks to Allen and that dominant line. As long as Allen stays healthy, Buffalo will keep reaching scoring range, and as long as the front five holds its form, Cook will keep finding running room to exploit. There's an added wrinkle, too, in that Allen's dual-threat presence ensures defenses can't key on Cook the way they normally would against a back producing at his level, cementing his standing as a high-end fantasy option.

CeeDee Lamb

WR - Round 2, Pick 12 - Bye 14

Ranking consistently among the elite options at his position, Lamb boasts five consecutive 1,000-yard campaigns. He missed just six total games across his first six professional seasons, though five of those absences occurred over the past two years. The dynamic weapon expertly blends vertical receiving skills with an unmatched ability to generate yards after the catch. He easily evades coverage and shakes tackles despite lacking elite speed or a massive physical frame. His underlying metrics remained fantastic last season, highlighted by an 11.7-yard average depth of target that bounced back from a career-low 7.6 mark. Generating 2.50 yards per route run secured him a tie for eighth among all wide receivers.

Lamb encounters a new ceiling constraint following the breakout performance of teammate George Pickens. The Dallas offense clearly hums with both players on the field, but sharing volume naturally limits top-end upside. The former first-round pick requires a massive target share to support his premium price tag in fantasy drafts. He remains a lethal weapon capable of piling up steady weekly production, though justifying a first-round selection requires clawing back opportunities from his talented counterpart.

Malik Nabers

WR - Round 3, Pick 29 - Bye 8

A devastating combination of a torn ACL and meniscus abruptly halted the promising sophomore campaign of Nabers, who averaged 10.7 targets per game over the opening three weeks. A likely WR1 fantasy season instead turned into a complicated recovery process, with the meniscus injury delaying his rehab for the ACL tear.

Nabers then required a minor follow-up procedure this spring to clear out scar tissue that was restricting his flexibility in the affected knee. The Giants haven't ruled him out for the start of the season, but reports at OTAs didn't sound especially optimistic either. When healthy, Nabers remains the undisputed focal point of an offense that's otherwise banking on quantity over quality at wide receiver. The Giants do have RB Cam Skattebo and TE Isaiah Likely as breakout candidates, but Nabers will see an enormous target share if he eventually returns to his pre-injury level.

Chris Olave

WR - Round 4, Pick 32 - Bye 8

Elite downfield production fueled a remarkable statistical resurgence for Olave last season. He paced the entire NFL with 33 targets and six touchdowns on passes thrown 20 or more yards downfield, although he left some yardage on the table by dropping three passes. He also made a solid impact on intermediate throws by generating 350 yards and three scores. He saw heavy volume near the line of scrimmage with 74 targets within 10 yards, but these resulted in empty calories for the offense. He caught 85.1 percent of those short passes for 63 receptions, yet he managed just 6.1 yards per catch with zero touchdowns and only 18 first downs. He clearly excels at route running and catching rather than picking up additional yardage after the reception.

Olave authored one of the best stories of 2025 by delivering a career year after repeated trips to the concussion protocol left his playing future in doubt. He missed only Week 18 to treat a blood clot in his lung, an issue that limited his spring participation but should resolve before training camp. He surpassed 1,000 yards for the third time in four seasons and established career highs with 156 targets, 100 catches, 1,163 yards, and nine touchdowns. He simultaneously posted career lows with 7.5 yards per target and 11.6 yards per catch. He faces new target competition after the Saints added Jordyn Tyson and Travis Etienne, who will likely absorb some of those short targets. Added competition hurts his PPR fantasy value, but the situation can work out if Tyler Shough plays well and pushes the ball downfield.

David Montgomery

RB - Round 5, Pick 49 - Bye 8

Montgomery signed with Houston this offseason to be the starting running back after backing up Jahmyr Gibbs in Detroit. At 29, he grades as at least an average NFL starter, and one who can stay on the field for every down and situation. Woody Marks is a plausible candidate for passing-down snaps, yet that's mostly a function of Montgomery simply needing occasional rest, not any shortcoming, as he's repeatedly proven himself both blocking and catching passes. As a runner, there's no contest between the two. Neither is going to outrun defensive backs, but the 230-pound Montgomery can bulldoze defenders and punish a defense with power running at volume.

Montgomery will benefit if the Houston offense bounces back. Should C.J. Stroud rediscover even a slice of his rookie-year form, Montgomery would be positioned beautifully for heavy volume and steady scoring chances. And if both Stroud and the offensive line take a step forward, he'd be in a solid fantasy spot.

Tucker Kraft

TE - Round 6, Pick 52 - Bye 11

Kraft turned 41 targets into 469 yards and six touchdowns before a devastating ACL tear in Week 9 ended his season. He averaged 15.3 yards per catch on the strength of a 10.7 yards-after-catch average, solidifying himself as the heir apparent to George Kittle as the top YAC threat at tight end. Last year's efficiency may not be sustainable, but Kraft looks like a real threat to annually rank among the position's leaders in yards per catch and yards per target.

Kraft is optimistic about returning for Week 1 of 2026, but the Green Bay medical staff is known for conservative rehab timelines and won't rush him for a September game if there's any doubt at all. The bigger question than Week 1 availability is whether Kraft will show the same explosiveness that fueled his fantasy production last offseason. If so, he can be a steal at his draft-day price even if he misses a game or two at the start of the year.

J.K. Dobbins

RB - Round 7, Pick 69 - Bye 10

Dobbins is reasonably built at 5-foot-10, 212, yet runs as if convinced he's closer to 250. That fire makes him one of the league's most ferocious runners, but the fearless, self-disregarding style seems to wear him down over time. He's likely a better receiver than his dismal pass-catching production in Denver would suggest. For all the talent, though, he's never come close in the NFL to matching what he did at Ohio State.

Dobbins remains largely that same player, but durability concerns and mounting competition cap his realistic fantasy ceiling at RB2 or flex territory. Denver only added to the traffic, spending a second-round pick on RJ Harvey last year and a fourth-rounder on 220-pound Jonah Coleman this year, threatening his target share and goal-line work. That mix of limited upside and elevated injury risk makes him more of a bench piece than a trusted starter, despite projecting as Denver's Week 1 lead back.

Jameson Williams

WR - Round 8, Pick 72 - Bye 6

Williams followed up his 2024 breakout with a 2025 campaign that featured similar receiving numbers. He did it over 17 regular-season games instead of 15, producing 11 yards per target for a second straight year. Williams initially struggled to command volume, averaging a mere 4.8 targets over his first nine appearances, before his usage spiked to 7.4 targets per game when Sam LaPorta suffered a season-ending injury.

Williams operated within a Detroit offense that declined from an elite unit in 2024 to merely a good one in 2025. He watched the offensive line take a significant step backward, which could be a problem once again this year. The Lions no longer have RB David Montgomery, indicating the offense will likely consolidate even more around Williams, LaPorta, Jahmyr Gibbs and Amon-Ra St. Brown. There's no real competition for snaps, though young wideout Isaac TeSlaa is a dark horse to play spoiler when it comes to deep volume and red-zone targets.

Justin Herbert

QB - Round 9, Pick 89 - Bye 7

Herbert finished as the QB10 in 2025, an unlikely feat bolstered by a career-high 498 rushing yards, most of which were "survival scrambles" behind an injury-ravaged offensive line. The Chargers allowed Herbert to be pressured on 43 percent of his dropbacks, forcing him to use his legs just to avoid catastrophe. However, the organization is pivoting toward stability this year, with standout tackles Rashawn Slater and Joe Alt expected to be healthy to open the season.

Herbert now has much better protection, so the Chargers likely expect him to trade last year's scramble yards for more efficient passing production under new play-caller Mike McDaniel. McDaniel's scheme should create cleaner pockets and easier windows for Herbert to utilize his elite arm talent and size. While the receiving corps lacks a proven No. 1 option, the combination of improved blocking and a smarter offensive design should elevate Herbert's efficiency - and possibly his passing TD total.

RJ Harvey

RB - Round 10, Pick 92 - Bye 10

A 2025 second-round pick, Harvey scored 12 touchdowns last season, seven on the ground and five through the air, while compiling 896 scrimmage yards. His receiving work stood out in particular, as he drew 58 targets on just 478 snaps and turned them into 47 receptions. The nagging concern is usage, though, since Denver never seemed eager to feed him, and he closed the regular season with less than 200 touches despite J.K. Dobbins missing seven games.

Harvey has more competition this year, as the Broncos invested a fourth-round pick in 220-pound Jonah Coleman, and Sean Payton has shown a willingness to burn snaps on the likes of Tyler Badie and Jaleel McLaughlin. That the staff funneled nearly a third of the backfield work to non-factors may hint at reservations about Harvey. He clearly outclasses that group and probably Coleman too, but Coleman's arrival could still nibble at his rushing-touchdown share, capping his early season ceiling absent injuries ahead of him.

Travis Kelce

TE - Round 11, Pick 109 - Bye 5

Kelce returns to the Chiefs for his 14th professional season after opting to hold off on retirement for another year. He finished fourth among tight ends in both targets and receiving yards last year, performing as a solid, mid-range TE1 in fantasy until Patrick Mahomes' ACL tear torpedoed the Kansas City offense in December. Looking at the bigger picture, Kelce averaged 886 receiving yards over his past three campaigns, after previously topping 1,000 yards for seven consecutive seasons.

Kelce has also seen a steep decline in scoring opportunities, posting his lowest three-year touchdown total since 2013-15. Kelce maintains an incredibly secure role as a short-area target alongside wideout Rashee Rice, but there's no doubt the Chiefs view Rice as the primary option when he's healthy and not suspended. With Kelce's big-play ability largely gone at 36, he's a reliable, low-upside fantasy starter best suited to full-PPR leagues.

Jaxson Dart

QB - Round 12, Pick 112 - Bye 8

The 25th pick in last year's draft, Dart was named the Giants' starter by Week 4 and finished as the QB13 in fantasy despite starting only 12 games. His value was heavily propped up by his running ability, as he ranked in the top three among all quarterbacks in rushing yards and touchdowns. He showed a willingness to absorb contact on both scrambles and designed runs, though it did contribute to multiple head injuries and two missed games midseason.

Dart may be reined in some this year, but he should nonetheless remain an effective runner. Dart's passing was more volatile last year, as he struggled with accuracy on deep throws and dealt with the loss of Malik Nabers to an ACL tear. If Nabers returns healthy, the Giants' passing game could see a significant jump despite the less-than-exciting hire of Matt Nagy as offensive coordinator. For fantasy purposes, Dart's rushing usage might be the bigger question, especially near the goal line where Brian Daboll used him like peak Cam Newton for a two-month stretch last year. A repeat of that may be too much to expect, but Dart still offers potential to run in touchdowns via scrambles, sneaks and designed runs.

Jaguars

DEF - Round 13, Pick 129 - Bye 7

Jacksonville's defense faces a challenging transition in 2026, moving forward without linebacker Devin Lloyd and cornerback Greg Newsome after a strong 2025 campaign. Coordinator Anthony Campanile, who successfully leveraged last season's success into head coaching interviews, returns to lead a unit that forced 31 takeaways last year. To mitigate the loss of Newsome, the Jaguars are expected to use Travis Hunter at cornerback more often-perhaps even in a full-time role. While the team's ability to stifle the run and win in the turnover column was a hallmark of last season, a significantly harder schedule means repeating that success is no guarantee. The good news is that Jacksonville opens the season with one of the easiest matchups possible, welcoming the Browns to EverBank Stadium in Week 1.

Jordyn Tyson

WR - Round 14, Pick 132 - Bye 8

In college, Tyson paired massive production (6.4 catches for 86.3 yards over his final two seasons at ASU) with repeated injury problems, including an ACL tear and a collarbone fracture. A lingering hamstring issue sidelined him for pre-draft drills, and while he returned to health this offseason, he re-injured the hamstring during training camp.

Tyson is unlikely to play Week 1 and could even miss extended time. Once healthy, he'll join an offense featuring running back Travis Etienne, tight end Juwan Johnson and wideout Chris Olave, leaving ample room for both him and Olave to command strong target shares in head coach Kellen Moore's up-tempo system. The outlook also hinges on quarterback Tyler Shough, who took 31 sacks as a rookie but otherwise delivered solid passing efficiency (7.3 YPA, 13 total touchdowns) in nine starts. With Olave operating downfield, the rookie should lean heavily on his 6-foot-2, 203-pound frame in the shallow and intermediate areas of the field. First, Tyson will need to prove he can stay healthy.

Rachaad White

RB - Round 15, Pick 149 - Bye 7

Volume was never the issue for White at his best, as his 2023 season featured 272 carries and 64 receptions across a hefty 823 snaps. The receiving work was the real calling card throughout his four years in Tampa Bay, where he hauled in 205 passes and proved he could catch at a genuinely high level. What he couldn't do was sustain that starring role, largely because his running lacks the power to win short yardage and the juice to break off big gains. He handled a bell-cow load fine in 2023, but he's not a complete back on the ground, so the arrival of Bucky Irving in 2024 and Sean Tucker's emergence in 2025 steadily chipped away at his usage.

White signed a one-year, $2 million deal with Washington this offseason, but a revival is far from assured. Jacory Croskey-Merritt looks set to command the carries, pushing White toward a passing-down niche he'll have to defend against Jeremy McNichols and Jerome Ford. His higher salary offers no guarantees, so even in the best case he's a modest fantasy piece at most.

KURT

D

GRADE

Average Sports Enthusiast Drafts Like They Were Playing with One Hand Tied Behind Their Back!

RECORD

4-10-0

POWER

#6

PROJ PTS

1718.37

SEAT

10

SUMMARY

In a draft that can only be described as a rollercoaster of emotions, Average Sports Enthusiast found themselves at the back of the pack, picking 10th out of 10. With a draft grade of D, it seems like they might have confused their draft board with a grocery list. Their projected record of 4-10-0 suggests that they might be better off playing checkers instead of fantasy football this season. But hey, at least they have 1718.37 projected points to keep their spirits up, right?

The schedule isn't doing Average Sports Enthusiast any favors either, with the 6th toughest lineup in the league looming ahead. With three players on bye week 10, it looks like they might be spending that week trying to figure out how to make a sandwich instead of strategizing for victory. While they did snag Emeka Egbuka at a decent value, the choice of Colston Loveland at 31 might leave fans scratching their heads. Buckle up, Average Sports Enthusiast, it's going to be a bumpy ride!

BEST DRAFT PICK

Emeka Egbuka

WR - Round 6, Pick 51 - Bye 10

2025 PTS

164.20

2026 PTS

159.49

WORST DRAFT PICK

Colston Loveland

TE - Round 4, Pick 31 - Bye 10

2025 PTS

136.10

2026 PTS

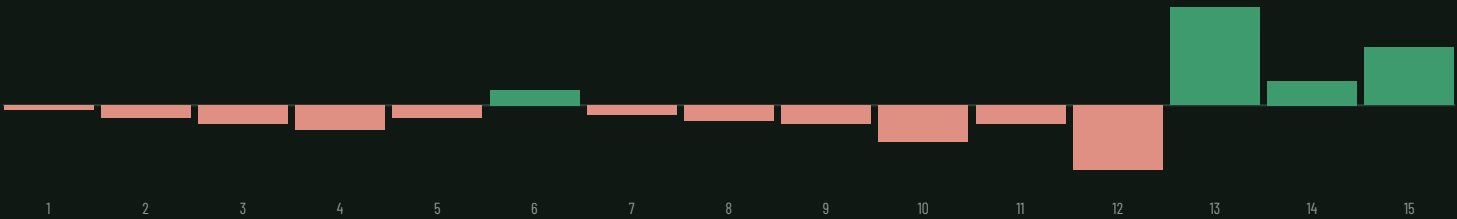

162.29

ADP ANALYSIS · VS ADP = PICK – ADP

Yahoo recap chart. Bars above zero: selected later than ADP. Below zero: earlier than ADP.

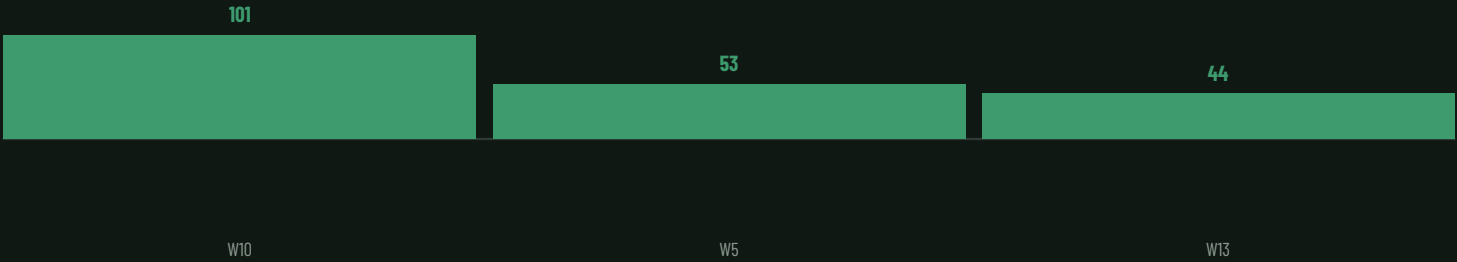

Pick	Player	Pos	ADP	vs ADP	NFL
1.10	Saquon Barkley	RB	11.3	-1	Phi
2.01	Kenneth Walker III	RB	15.3	-4	KC
3.10	Zay Flowers	WR	35.6	-6	Bal
4.01	Colston Loveland WORST	TE	39.2	-8	Chi
5.10	Terry McLaurin	WR	54.3	-4	Was
6.01	Emeka Egbuka BEST	WR	45.7	+5	TB
7.10	Dak Prescott	QB	73.1	-3	Dal
8.01	Jaylen Warren	RB	76.0	-5	Pit
9.10	Alec Pierce	WR	96.0	-6	Ind
10.01	Broncos	DST	102.5	-12	Den
11.10	Jayden Reed	WR	116.1	-6	GB
12.01	Harrison Mevis	K	132.2	-21	LAR
13.10	Brock Purdy	QB	98.4	+32	SF
14.01	KC Concepcion	WR	123.2	+8	Cle
15.10	Woody Marks	RB	130.7	+19	Hou

ADP ANALYSIS CHART

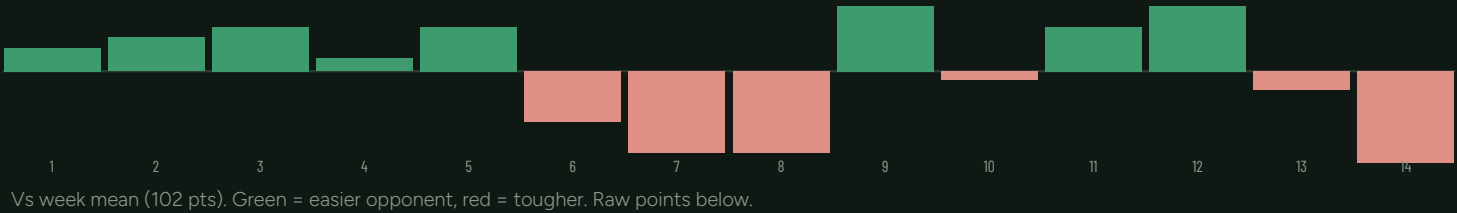

Round 1–15. Same values as the Yahoo ADP Analysis bars. Green = later than ADP, red = earlier.

TEAM FORECAST - BYE WEEK POINTS LOST

Projected season points sitting that week. Higher bar = more production on bye.

SCHEDULE BY OPPONENT POINTS

Vs week mean (102 pts). Green = easier opponent, red = tougher. Raw points below.

W1	W2	W3	W4	W5	W6	W7	W8	W9	W10	W11	W12	W13	W14
104	105	106	103	106	97	94	94	108	101	106	108	100	93

PLAYER OUTLOOKS - YAHOO WRITEUPS

Saquon Barkley

RB - Round 1, Pick 10 - Bye 10

It's fair to say the stars aligned for Barkley in his 2024 arrival in Philadelphia, and 2025 illustrated just how tough those conditions are to duplicate. However, even in a season that seemed like the worst-case outcome short of injury, he still churned out 1,413 yards and nine touchdowns from scrimmage. When that's the floor, the panic should be minimal. The offense as a whole is a bit of question entering the season. The Jalen Hurts and A.J. Brown relationship ended with Brown dealt to New England, forcing a schematic rethink, and the offensive line slipped from its dominant peak while battling injuries at left guard, center and right tackle. The absence of Lane Johnson over the second half stung the run game most of all.

Barkley has reasons for optimism, though. Simple better line health will make a huge difference, as new coordinator Sean Mannion works to reset the scheme, including a new outside-zone running game, while integrating rookie receiver Makai Lemon and rookie tight end Eli Stowers. No matter how that all resolves, Barkley should stay among the RB leaders in snaps and carries per game.

Kenneth Walker III

RB - Round 2, Pick 11 - Bye 5

Seattle might not have hoisted the Lombardi Trophy without Walker, who carried the offense through the playoffs and offered a compelling preview of what he can do as a true feature back. Zach Charbonnet's ACL tear in the divisional playoffs opened the door, and Walker charged through it, racking up 417 scrimmage yards (104 receiving) and four rushing touchdowns in three postseason games.

Walker now takes his talents to Kansas City, where a considerably larger regular-season role awaits. His timeshare last year with Charbonnet kept him healthy, but it also cost him short-yardage scores that went to Charbonnet. That won't be an issue in Kansas City, where he's positioned to command both a bigger overall share and, crucially, the goal-line work. His three-year, $43.05 million contract all but guarantees it, and the flimsy veteran depth behind him only reinforces the point. The lone red flag is durability, as he stayed healthy in 2025 but battled an assortment of lower-body and abdominal injuries in each of the three seasons prior, never playing a full season until in last year's timeshare. If he holds up, though, a big workload is his for the taking.

Zay Flowers

WR - Round 3, Pick 30 - Bye 13

A busy offseason brought new offensive coordinator Declan Doyle to Baltimore, giving Flowers an opportunity to take the next step with his production. The new system figures to depend heavily on Flowers and RB Derrick Henry, especially with WR Rashod Bateman and TE Mark Andrews trying to recover from down campaigns in 2025. Roster adjustments leave the passing depth chart incredibly thin after the departures of Isaiah Likely to the Giants and DeAndre Hopkins to free agency.

Flowers enters this new landscape following a 2025 season where he established personal highs with 86 catches, 1,211 yards, and 118 targets, buoyed by a huge Week 18. Efficiency metrics showcased clear development even before the strong finish, as he surged to 2.8 yards per route and 10.3 yards per target even though Baltimore's offense had a down year. Red zone deployment remains Flowers' biggest statistical limitation, but the new coaching staff offers hopes for change there.

Colston Loveland

TE - Round 4, Pick 31 - Bye 10

Loveland finished his solid rookie year with a bang, putting up 378 yards and two touchdowns over his final four games, including playoffs. He saw 48 targets in that stretch, which is unsustainable long term yet still shows rare target-earning potential for a tight end. Loveland also put up highly respectable numbers prior to his surge, compiling 42 catches for 528 yards and four scores across his first 14 contests.

Loveland now sits in prime position to command a large target share following the offseason departure of D.J. Moore. Fellow tight end Cole Kmet is still around to poach a few snaps, but Loveland may be too good to take off the field for more than a snap or two here and there. His real competition for targets comes from WRs Luther Burden and Rome Odunze, with all three considered strong breakout candidates in an offense powered by coach Ben Johnson and QB Caleb Williams. Long story short, Loveland is a top-10 draft pick who lays claim to one of the most productive age-21 seasons in the history of his position.

Terry McLaurin

WR - Round 5, Pick 50 - Bye 7

New offensive coordinator David Blough has established massive volume expectations for McLaurin by stating his desire for the receiver to see 10 targets per game. (McLaurin will likely fall short of that number given that he hasn't averaged even eight targets since 2020.) He does figure to command plenty of looks by most other standards, primarily competing with WR Stefon Diggs and TE Chig Okonkwo. In other words, McLaurin is the clear No. 1 option for Jayden Daniels again.

McLaurin missed seven games last season due to a quad injury, which snapped his impressive four-year streak of playing all 17 contests. He endured a tumultuous year that began with a brief holdout and trade request following a 2024 campaign that featured a career-high 13 touchdowns and a 70.1 percent catch rate. McLaurin eventually missed all of training camp before signing a three-year extension, only to suffer the quad injury in Week 3. He averaged a respectable 12.7 PPR points over his final seven games and quietly finished seventh among all receivers with 2.55 yards per route -- an improvement over 2.32 YPRR from his career year in 2024.

Emeka Egbuka

WR - Round 6, Pick 51 - Bye 10

Front-loaded production defined a bizarre rookie campaign for Egbuka, who looked like a fantasy WR1 at the of September. He started to slow down in October, then managed one big performance mid-season before completely falling off down the stretch. Egbuka closed out the season mired in an eight-game slump that featured zero touchdowns, though it wasn't until the final weeks that his target volume and snap counts started to suffer for the lack of production.

Egbuka tied for the league lead with nine drops, but he also fell victim to an injured quarterback, an injured offensive line and a disappointing offensive scheme -- all factors that contributed to horrific efficiency numbers in the second half of the season. He now receives a fresh start under new offensive coordinator Zac Robinson, who held the same position in Atlanta the past two years. Egbuka's first-round pedigree and clear path to large snap counts make him an appealing breakout candidate, especially after the Bucs moved on from red-zone-dominator Mike Evans this offseason.

Dak Prescott

QB - Round 7, Pick 70 - Bye 14

After missing nine games in 2024, Prescott stayed healthy last season and finished as fantasy's QB6, topping 4,500 yards for the third time in his career while hitting 30 touchdown passes for the fourth time. His fantasy success was a product of massive volume and strong accuracy metrics, as he finished second in the league with 600 pass attempts while ranking third in CPOE (+4.4%) and 12th in completion percentage (67.3). Prescott consistently challenged defenses vertically, with 11 percent of his passes going 20-plus yards downfield, showing great chemistry with George Pickens and CeeDee Lamb.

Prescott's core group of playmakers, including tight end Jake Ferguson and running back Javonte Williams, returns intact for 2026, and the offensive line remains a strong unit, especially up the middle. Prescott has a similar fantasy profile to Joe Burrow, ranking solidly among the QB1s even if a lack of rushing stats hints at a lower ceiling than dual-threat alternatives offer.

Jaylen Warren

RB - Round 8, Pick 71 - Bye 9

Warren makes for an ideal RB2, as his receiving ability gives him a clear role while he can also mix in on the running game on early downs. That scenario changed last season when he took on more of the running game and had fewer targets. With Kaleb Johnson unable to crack the rotation and Kenneth Gainwell limited to in-space work, Warren took on more power-running duty and heavier contact than he was built for.

Warren should have a healthier balance this season. Rico Dowdle's arrival should shave Warren's carries, perhaps toward 150-175 rather than last year's 211, while Gainwell's exit opens the door to that vacated receiving volume. A path to 60-plus catches after just 40 last season is very much in play, and the lighter rushing workload should prove far more sustainable.

Alec Pierce

WR - Round 9, Pick 90 - Bye 13

Pierce received a substantial $60 million guarantee from the Colts, a signal of their high level of confidence in his ability. This deal was finalized despite the organization being fully aware that he would likely require surgery on his ankle. He eventually underwent the procedure in late spring, which puts his availability for the beginning of the 2026 season in serious doubt.

Pierce has spent the first three years of his professional career primarily acting as a deep-threat specialist. He showed growth last season by becoming more effective in the intermediate area of the field while continuing to rank among the league leaders in deep targets. He successfully surpassed the 1,000-yard mark for the campaign despite missing time due to a concussion. Indianapolis now expects him to play a central role in their passing attack alongside Tyler Warren, Josh Downs and Keenan Allen.

Broncos

DEF - Round 10, Pick 91 - Bye 10

Few defensive fronts have imposed their will quite like Denver's the last two seasons, as the Broncos led the NFL in sacks, pressures and quarterback hits in back-to-back years. What stands out is the balance of the attack. Nik Bonitto (13.5 sacks in 2025), Jonathon Cooper (10.5) and Zach Allen (8.5) form the headline trio, yet six additional players kicked in at least 2.5 sacks each last season. The Broncos generate ample heat rushing just four, but coordinator Vance Joseph still dials up extra pressure to unsettle quarterbacks, consistently ranking among the top 10 in blitz rate. That aggression is amplified by a secondary anchored by Patrick Surtain, who keeps cementing his case as perhaps the game's foremost shutdown corner. A couple of small worries linger, chiefly along the interior line following John Franklin-Myers' departure to Tennessee, but the nucleus of this dominant group returns intact. The biggest reason for fantasy managers to hesitate is the schedule, as Denver opens against Kansas City, Jacksonville, the Rams, San Francisco, the Chargers and Seattle across a punishing first six weeks.

Jayden Reed

WR - Round 11, Pick 110 - Bye 11

Reed opted for financial security heading into the final year of his rookie contract, signing a three-year, $50.3 million extension this past April following an injury-marred 2025 campaign. He entered the league with modest fantasy fanfare as the 50th overall pick out of Michigan State in 2023 but quickly established himself as an explosive big-play threat and occasional rusher out of the slot. He scored 10 total touchdowns (two on the ground) across 16 games as a rookie, averaging a healthy 13.5 PPR points while commanding 94 targets and 11 rushes. His second season yielded similar efficiency but dropped to an 11.7 PPR average across 17 games due to seeing 19 fewer targets.

Reed suffered a brutal string of bad luck in 2025, sustaining a preseason Jones fracture followed by a Week 2 collarbone fracture. He somehow fought his way onto the field for seven regular-season contests but was largely a non-factor on a meager 3.2 targets per game. The environment sets up beautifully for a 2026 rebound after Green Bay aggressively thinned out its crowded receiving corps this offseason, leaving a clear top-three trio of Reed, Christian Watson and Matthew Golden. While there is lingering concern regarding head coach Matt LaFleur primarily using him in three-wide sets, the severely reduced depth at the position could inspire a change in philosophy this season.

Harrison Mevis

K - Round 12, Pick 111 - Bye 11

Mevis stabilized a turbulent situation for the Rams last season after being inserted as the primary placekicker. He missed just one total kick across 12 appearances, demonstrating unexpected poise after going undrafted out of Missouri. Mevis primarily survived on extra points and short-range opportunities, attempting just two total kicks from beyond 50 yards across the regular season and playoffs. He converted both of those deep tries, confirming he possesses adequate leg strength when called upon.

Mevis is attached to an offense that's usually efficient at converting scoring chances into touchdowns, which means PAT volume may continue to outpace the three-point tries. He at least looks like a high-floor option for fantasy, with solid job security and a strong team environment.

Brock Purdy

QB - Round 13, Pick 130 - Bye 8

Purdy was limited to nine games last season due to shoulder and toe injuries, though he provided a massive statistical boost after the team's Week 14 bye. In his other six games, however, his efficiency was much more pedestrian, as he threw nearly as many interceptions as touchdowns. Purdy finished top three among qualified passers in completion percentage (69.6) and CPOE (+5.1%), but he rarely attacked downfield while dealing with a limited WR group.

Purdy's receiving room is in a state of transition, with George Kittle's Achilles injury, Ricky Pearsall's knee injury and the signing of veterans Mike Evans, Deebo Samuel and Christian Kirk. The good news for Purdy is that coach Kyle Shanahan, left tackle Trent Williams and running back Christian McCaffrey are still on the team, providing a degree of stability at the top. Purdy also adds fantasy points with both scrambles and QB sneaks in Shanahan's offense, rather than purely relying on the YPA boost that Shanahan provided for his previous signal-callers.

KC Concepcion

WR - Round 14, Pick 131 - Bye 11

The Browns drafted Concepcion in the first round and Denzel Boston in the second round this spring, remaking a WR room that was arguably the league's worst last season. Concepcion thus enters a depth chart that offers an immediate path to significant playing time, albeit with the drawback of a volatile quarterback situation. He turns 22 this fall after putting up 919 receiving yards last year at Texas A&M, where he also excelled as a return man and occasional rushing threat (after handling a similar role at NC State earlier in his career).

Concepcion offers average size at 6-feet, 196, winning consistently with lateral agility and short-area acceleration rather than pure vertical speed. An offseason knee scope prevented him from participating in pre-draft testing, which ultimately had minimal impact on his draft stock. He took part in offseason practices and isn't expected to have limitations in training camp. Concepcion figures to compete for a starting job immediately under new Browns head coach and playcaller Todd Monken.

Woody Marks

RB - Round 15, Pick 150 - Bye 8

Marks brings a do-a-little-of-everything presence to the backfield, competent enough across the range of running back duties to serve as a stopgap, yet likely lacking the explosiveness or singular trait needed to truly stand out. Circumstances forced him into duty as a rookie fourth-round pick, as Joe Mixon's ongoing absence handed him more work than expected, and he acquitted himself reasonably well, sitting out only Week 16 with a mild ankle sprain.

Marks would presumably slide right back into that role should free-agent addition David Montgomery miss time. He's a below-average pure runner by starter standards, but the intriguing angle is his receiving upside, though Montgomery is capable in that area as well.